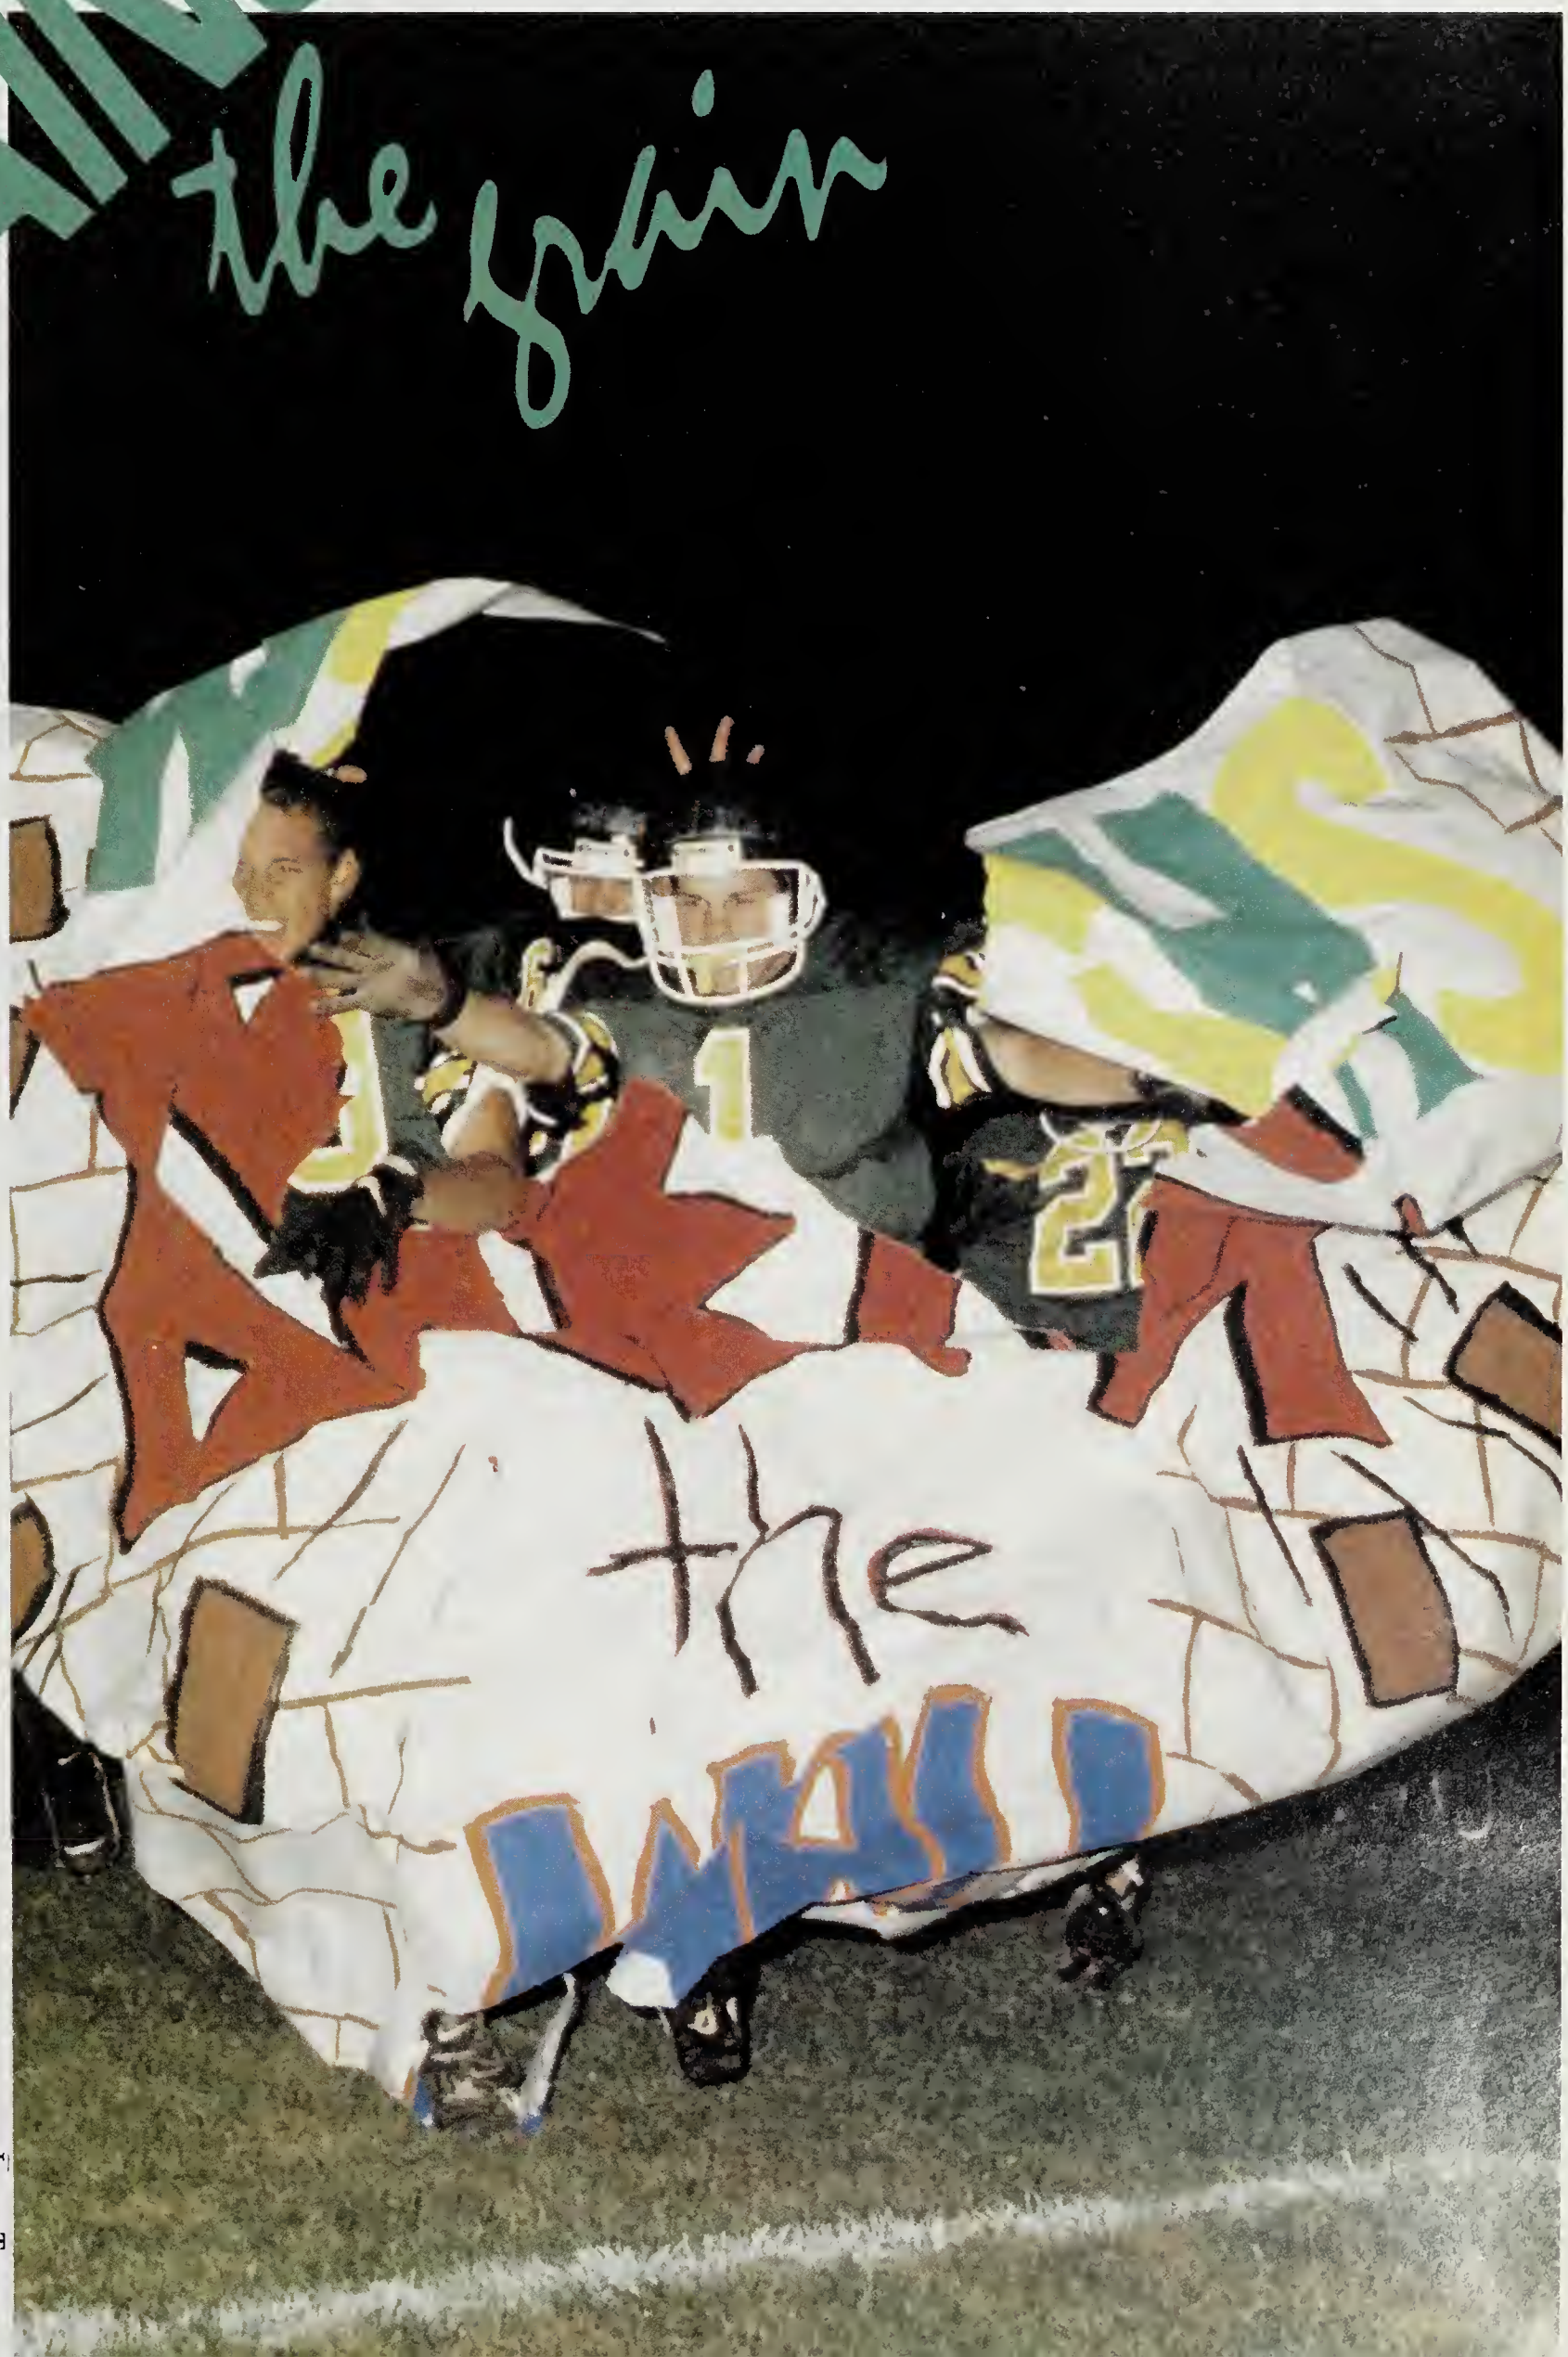
AGAINST the grain



Major Breakthroughs. Sophomore James Hottle and freshman Jamie Wrolstad lead the J.V. football team in a charge through the banner painted by the cheerleaders. The banner reenforced school spirit by displaying, "WSHS: Break the Wall."

Iyanna Tennon

Green and gold uniforms flow against the blue uniforms of Potomac High School. Seniors Emanita Dewitt, Danielle Eure, Carolyn Stegon and Erynne Brotherton compliment Potomac cheerleader, junior Kristi Brown, on her face paint. The Varsity cheerleaders took the opportunity to mingle with other schools in order to build a sense of sportsmanship. The Vikette dance squad and football team found this to be beneficial when they performed at games with other schools.

Take another look. Senior Bridgit Kelly carefully sketches a composition in pencil for Mr. Hailey's second period art class. Students cut holes in paper and looked through them to focus on a specific area of a still life scene. Students did this to concentrate on detail and to look at objects from another perspective. Kelly displayed her creativity through art, photography and writing. She expanded her opportunities for development in her skills by attending photography classes at NOVA.

AGAINST the grain

Against the grain?

grain is tradition. we needed some- year. And we are We're walking on We were the last

Keep in line. Second year cadet, senior Justin Hoertz leads first year cadets, freshmen Shannon Beauchamp, Keith Can-tron and Brad Cross in JROTC colorguard practice. Students practiced drills outside for extra space. Discipline, precision and concentration were vital in producing an orderly formation. The Virginia Military Institute and the Citadel, accepted girls for the first time since they became state funded preparatory academies.

What is that anyway? What's this grain you're talking about? The It's all the old rules. So why are we going against the grain? 'Cuz thing new. Something different. We got a new schedule this no longer walking in the footsteps of former students. How so? new carpet, tile and a brand new track. We set higher standards. school in Prince William County to go to 4 by 4 block schedulin

Everything's new; 85 minute long classes, the elimination of study halls, the new rules which say two tardies per semester equal a morning in detention, Freshman Seminar classes are required and based on pass or fail grades, and teachers have red hall passes. What else sets us apart? Woodbridge has the largest population in the state of Virginia, making us the "Best School East of the Mississippi". You know what they say, two is company and 3,000's a crowd. The freshmen make it their goal to promote multicultural awareness. We are the ones building the bridge to the 21st century. We are breaking the mold of all the old traditions. Woodn't you know it? We really are going our own way. We're going against the grain.

Against the grain, literally. Sophomore Jessica Riccuti climbs a tree in her backyard to relieve stress by remaining outside in the autumn air. During warm weather, teachers took their classes out of doors for a change in scenery and a breath of fresh air. Summer temperatures proved to be the mildest this area had seen in twenty years. The school beautification committees led by National Honor Society and Beta Club members and volunteers met once a month to discuss tree planting and flower gardens to enhance the school's aesthetic value.

Struggling against the flow of foot traffic like moving upstream, freshman Joe Moore and Russ Shetley head towards the Social Studies pod while other students struggle to leave the same pod. After school and between classes, students scattered in every direction, crossing paths. To alleviate crowds, a different bell rang five seconds earlier than the regular bell, to release the Social Studies classes. Back stairways as well as the library were used as shortcuts.

In charge of security, Mr. Jackie Watts, stands out against the stairs with his school spirited green and gold jacket.The stairs led up to the front office, which was one of three offices that were dispersed throughout the school. The first freshman class crossed the threshold of the building in 1973. With 1000 more students than anticipated seven trailers were added to allow more space for the most populated school in the state. The day started at 7:30 am and ended at 2 pm.

Although it took up 32 and a half hours out of students' lives each week, school was not a full time job. The other 168 hours were spent on more pleasurable and relaxing activities.

Students could not help but get involved with the lives of O.J. Simpson and Madonna. The civil suit against O.J. continued to pop up on current events quizzes and television screens weekly. Madonna had a baby girl, named Lourdes Maria.

Woodbridge made it on national television when MTV's House of Style featured The Green Barrel, a store near Potomac Mills mall. The Green Barrel supplied and specialized in clothing and skating and snowboarding equipment. The store was owned and operated by Woodbridge graduates, Brian Cropp and Steve Stanton. Rumor had it that, due to their success, The Green Barrel would open another store in Georgetown. Students made cameo appearances during the snow, accounting for their 15 minutes of fame.

The threat of a county-wide curfew for all people under 17 frightened students in to taking action against the proposed change. Letters poured into the editors of the Valkyrie and the Potomac News. Students went their own way and made time for themselves in the hustle and bustle of the Metropolitan area, allowing them to be safely in the clear and out of the woods

Lend me your ear. Junior Allison Sautkulis talks to her dog, Chauncy. Sautkulis' pets listened to her, and in this case, even talked back. Sautkulis was an avid animal lover. She had two dogs, three cats, birds and a one-eyed fish. Pets depended on students to feed and care for them, and in return, animals gave students companionship. For health purposes, school policy restricted dogs from treading school grounds. Animals kept by science teachers were the only exceptions. At home, students had pets ranging from albino snakes and anoles to guinea pigs and rabbits. With the release of movies, such as "Larger Than Life" and Disney's remake of "101 Dalmations," animals were brought to the big screen nationwide.

"I like to read and write.My family calls me a book worm. I am writing a story I started last year and it's about 28 pages long by now, but I still don't know what I'm going to do with it yet."

THINKING CAPS

Graduating Seniors Cross the Threshold of Adulthood Into the Real World

"Things have changed but it doesn't mean they have to end." The words of graduate Marleah Peabody's original song "Look How Far We've Come" drifted through the spring air. On June 14, the senior class graduated in the A.T. Howard Memorial Stadium.

The band performed "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" with the choir. "I liked it when the choir sang because it is a tradition for them to sing the song at every graduation," junior Kelly Gray said.

For graduates, receiving their diplomas was the final event of their high school years. "On the day of graduation I was not nervous until I walked down the roped chute leading to the stage. I was scared about walking across the stage in front of the audience and my classmates. I was happy that all the practices leading up to graduation were over and the whole ceremony was done," graduate Danny Reese said.

Valedictorian Megan Rossi gave a speech entitled "Look How Far We've Come." Saluditorian Jeff Giasson gave the farewell address. "It took him awhile to write the speech. My family collaborated our ideas and my brother worked on it with Jeff. He didn't want a speech that would put the audience to sleep so he added a little humor," junior Sherri Giasson said. His speech was a top ten list of everything he would remember about school.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, the 622 graduates stood and marched around the track, every other row walking in opposite directions. After walking half a length of the track, the rows intertwined and they proceeded to throw their caps into the night air.

by Jennifer Sikorski and Kimmy Reese

"Boys grew up and girls grew out." As Saluditorian it was senior Jeff Giasson's job to give the farewell address to his class. Among the things mentioned in his speech were fashion trends, cafeteria food, and notable teachers.

After receiving his diploma, graduate Sean Urban leans forward to get a better view of the remainder of the ceremony. Graduation endured for two and a half hours with the presentation of school awards and diplomas.

"No matter how far apart we are, I promise we won't have to say goodbye." Senior Kim Whitlock signed to the music as seniors John Dooley and Marleah Peabody sing the lyrics to the graduation song, "Look How Far We've Come."

Savor the moment. Senior Mike Sands quenches his last minute thirst while waiting to receive his diploma. Due to the heat, seniors were allowed to bring bottled beverages to keep themselves hydrated during the long ceremony.

With the line leaders guiding the way, the Class of 1996 marches into the stadium to the beat of the Processional song. Family and friends watched from the bleachers and hillside as the seniors made their way to their assigned seats.

With a sip of her water, senior Claudia Padilla takes a breather as her date, Oscar Iguirre listens closely to her. Prom's catering service offered finger foods and drinks for students to eat while enjoying the company of their date.

Smiles stretched across seniors Blair Lockamy and Jennifer-Anne Isherwood's faces, as they step on the floor hand in hand. After the crowning, the king and queen performed the traditional dance in front of fellow prom attendees.

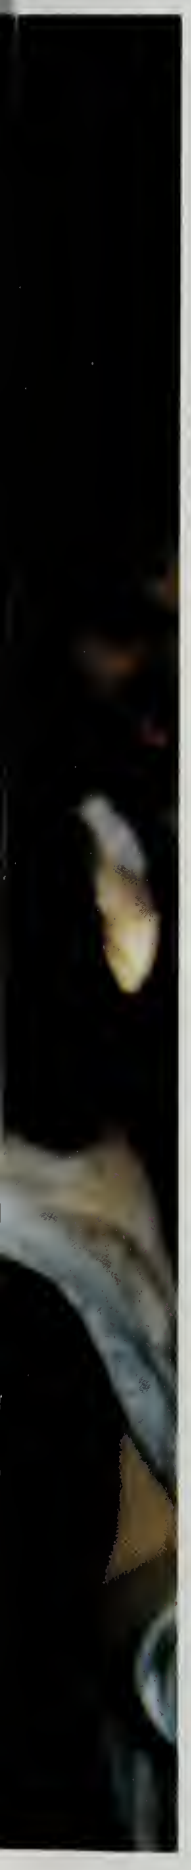
Embraced in each other's arms, seniors Juan Sanchez and No Souvanaratana gaze deeply into each others eyes, as they sway to the slow song. The romantic setting of prom was held at the Washington National Airport Hotel.



STARRY NIGHT

Going Against Traditions, Students Made Prom 'A Night to Remember'

The setting sun glistened on the shiny new Jaguar that rested alongside the curb. At the front door stood an astonished senior, Andrea Flannagan. "My date rented a forest green Jaguar for prom that had beige leather interior, a car phone, and a driver who escorted us everywhere, including cruising all around D.C. It made it an awesome night, and was definitely better than a limo," Flannagan said.

Preparations included activities such as renting a tuxedo, finding a dress and buying boutineres and corsages. "I bought this really pretty dress that hooks on the shoulder, and it kept coming unhooked and falling down at the dance, so I had to hold it up the whole night and play it off like I was itching my shoulder," junior Nikki Floris said.

Preparations had to be made weeks in advance, to make sure there were no inconveniences on prom night. Students bought their dresses ranging from a year in advance to the day before.

Unforeseen mishaps and unforgettable moments blended in with the theme of prom to make it truly, 'A Night to Remember.'

"After the dance, my date Taly went to get the car, but it was locked in the parking garage. When we were finally on our way out of the garage, some guy was suddenly on the hood of our car. Taly had hit him even though we were going really slow. I was in shock when all the man did was walk away," senior Elizabeth Bowden said.

The dance was complete with the crowning of prom Queen and King, Jennifer-Anne Isherwood and Blair Lockamy.

Draped in flowers and baby's breath, senior Maria Fulcolvich talks with her date, senior Antonio Mota during a song. Corsages were traditional when formal occasions arose, and flowers were used to enhance hairstyles or dresses.

It's been an extremely long night! Sophomores Meghan McLaurin and Chris Kelly escaped to the halls from the heat of the dance caused by the cramped quarters. They passed the time by hitting a balloon between them.

RAIN GO AWAY

Despite Inclement Weather, Students Danced Their Way Through the Night

The clouds threatened to burst.

The weather forecast called for heavy downpours, but the parade and football game were still scheduled. It was sprinkling for the parade, however, it quickly turned to a steady downpour for the game.

"This was my first time marching in a parade. I had heard about the predicted rain, but was glad that it wasn't too bad. I thought that it was fun, because it was preparation for the big game. When everyone saw the floats and class banners, they got into the spirit," junior Nidhi Sharma said.

The sidewalks were flooded on both the left and right sides with spectators. The sophomores won the float contest, but the seniors won the prize for the best banner.

Students attended the game despite heavy downpours. Though scheduled to start at 7:30 pm, it was delayed for 20 minutes because of the rain. "The game was like standing in the coldest shower possible wearing heavy clothing. Now imagine a 20 mph wind blowing through there, and you have the game," junior Dawn Dunn said. The football team went on to defeat the T.C. Williams team with a score of 27-0.

The music at the dance was handled by a D.J. "I only heard the beat of the bass in every song. It got to the point where I no longer heard the beat; I felt it," sophomore Haley Wells said. The music selection included the "Macarena" and "Come on and Ride It (the Train)."

The dance began at 9 pm and ended at midnight. "I wish I had brought a camera to take pictures of my friends looking real fly!" sophomore Ellie Sachs said.

"I enjoyed the evening because I was an escort and because I could spend time with my girlfriend.
Abey Malave-Lopez - 9"

"The wind was blowing so hard that my friend Meredith's umbrella was bent at a 90 degree angle.
Jose Castano - 10"

Senior Monique Brown is nothing but smiles as principal, Mrs. Pamela White hands her a bouquet of roses. This was to officially complete her coronation for homecoming queen. Seniors Dorie Pi and Angie Gress were the runners up.

Relieved to finally get some time away from the crowds of people, sophomore Daniel Thompson exchanges an affectionate stare with junior, Becky Monahan. The theme of the homecoming dance was "Dance to the Music."

The show must go on! Junior Valerie Fowler does not hesitate to march alone to show her school spirit. The marching band had to perform despite the sprinkles. They wore rain gear to protect their uniforms from the falling rain.

Let's go back in the day! The sophomore class gathered together and dressed in poodle skirts, leather jackets, and fixed their hair according to the style of the 1950's. They did this to prepare themselves for the upcoming parade.

Charms and trinkets hang around junior Kim Nevitt's neck, as she does her classwork. Exquisite and colorful jewelry dressed up students' casual attire. Love beads, charms and other vintage jewelry held special meanings for its owner.

> "I have this headband that looks like a CD. It's silver, but from different angles, it looks like a rainbow.

The grating sound against the desk of junior Tim Azzarano's punk jewelry distracts him as he tries to write on his paper. Other punk jewelry included ball chains, bike chains, and gauges which were personalized by color and size.

FUNKADELIC

Belts, Purses, and Jewelry Reflect the Personalities of Students

As she dug through her box filled with jewelry, junior Lindsay Williams went on a treasure hunt for the most astounding ring. "I wear those big funky rings from the sixties with all those rainbow colors on them because they stand out from the rest," Williams said.

Students' accessories included jewelry. "I have these super big earrings that are striped with seven different fluorescent colors like hot pink, and neon green in them. It has four or five chain links with a huge circle on the bottom that dangles down past my shoulder," sophomore Danie Kanouse said.

Aside from jewelry, students experimented with different hair styles. "I like all the different styles and colors of barrettes. I have fourteen in my hair, some are flowers and animals that I got from Giant," freshman Nicole Killen said. Students roamed the aisles of stores until something caught their eye.

Bright colors and bold patterns drew attention. "I have lots of different types of stockings with stripes. Some with zippers on the front, a pattern of cute little men and neon orange ones with pink spirals. They are so different that I don't have outfits that match them so I don't wear them to school too often," junior Lynda Boone said. Students' offbeat attire gave them a striking image.

Students created accessories in school. "I wear anything from school supplies like pencils in the hair and paper clips to love beads," sophomore Danielle Stovall said.

Students tried to break away from the norm in the crowded hallways. The visible way was by wearing funky accessories.

Smile! While freshman Lavelle Williams shows off her sheer scarf and hoop earings, she accepts a compliment given in the hallway. Dainty scarves were fashion trends adopted from actresses and singers of the fifties.

Candyland! Freshman Reed Hood wears a multicolored pastel candy necklace in place of a choker. In addition to brightening up her outfit, she snacked on her edible necklace in Mrs. Susan Ohle's Freshman Seminar class before lunch.

Portable phone in hand, sophomore Bailey Sautkulis relaxes on her living room couch to talk to a friend. She wore four to five bracelets and rings on each hand. Students bought or made their own accessories at affordable prices.

Funky Accesories

While looking for jewlery at Claire's Boutiques, junior Jessica Lock sees a necklace that she wants to try on. Mirrors were located around the store for that reason. Specialty stores carried the accessories that students were looking for.

After discovering a coat that catches her eye at Potomac Mills' Benetton Outlet, sophomore Amber Parks checks for the right size and price. Benetton opened a clearance store in the mall during the winter season months.

TOP SHOP

Students Shop 'Til They Drop to Keep Stores in Business

As she entered Jean Country in Manassas Mall, sophomore Melissa Kramer checked her reflection in the mirror one last time. "I shop at Jean Country because there is a really cute guy that works there. Once when we talked we exchanged phone numbers, now I go to see him when I go to the mall," Kramer said.

Convenience kept students going back to their favorite stores. With Potomac Mills Mall being one of the world's largest outlet malls, students had to find places to meet.

"When I go to see a movie with my friends, I usually meet them in The Wall at Potomac Mills Mall. While I'm waiting, I look for the soundtrack from the movie that I'm about to see, because I collect each one," junior Julie Nelson said.

Novelty stores proved to be attractive to students because they offered a variety of strange and unusual items. Accidents happened, causing employees to forbid students to return to that store.

"My favorite store is Spencer Gifts in Springfield Mall because they have a lot of funny gag gifts there. I was shopping around one day and saw some guy looking at the cards. He laughed and spit soda all over them. He ran out and since I was the only one left in the store with a soda, I was blamed and told never to come back," junior Dominic Willenbring said.

Malls that students frequented were Tysons Corner, Pentagon City, Landmark Mall, Springfield Mall and Potomac Mills Mall.

Big Dog! Senior Chris Sahami looks at a pair of boxers to add to his collection of his favorite brand of clothing, Big Dog. When students found a brand of clothing that suited their tastes, they shopped at the stores that carried that line of clothing.

Favorite Stores

As senior Kodi Smith sorts through the magazine basket in his family room, he looks for the most recent issue of Time. He needed the magazine to prepare for a current events quiz. Not having magazines in order made them hard to find.

Iyana Tennon

On the hunt for his homework, senior Weis Amani searches through his backpack. His homework was tucked inside his American Studies II book. Lost books caused a large problem for students, as the books cost students 20 to 50 dollars.

Marian Gryder

"Alright everybody, get out your homework assignments," Mrs Tabek said. Junior Erol McEachron, ruffles through his bag to find his homework. The Language Arts assignment that had just been called for was missing.

Good things come in small packages. Those small packages were also hard to find. Sophomore Tamika Dudley searched through a jewelry box for an earring back. Earring backs were among the more difficult items to find.

LOST AND FOUND

Keeping Track of Various Items Causes Problems for Chronically Forgetful Students

Frantically running around the house, junior Cassandra Weddel searched through the piles of papers and books on the dining room table. "Where on earth are they?" Weddel screamed. With school starting in twenty minutes, she could not find her car keys.

"I can never find my keys in the morning. After I search all over the house, and finally find them, it's already really late. I end up getting to my friend's house around 7 in the morning, and if there's traffic, which there usually is, we will be late," Weddel said. Students altered their schedules to accomodate misplaced belongings.

Disorganized environments made it difficult to find items that were lost. "My phone is always getting buried under piles of clothes in my room. When I hit the page button, I either can't hear the phone beep, or I can't get there in time to find where the sound is coming from," senior Ruth Wilshere said.

In addition to losing their own property, students misplaced items that did not belong to them. Overdue library books and rented movies caused students to incur fines in addition to rental fees.

"When I check out library books for my debate topics, I can never find them. Now, the library won't let me borrow from them anymore because I still have Immanuel Kant's Critique of Pure Reason checked out from over a year ago," junior Bo Young said.

In the endless search for lost belongings, students could check in the Lost and Found or replace a missing object by borrowing from a friend or buying a new one.

by Sean Lyng

A balancing act. Junior David Sigmund tries to keep his notebooks from falling out of his bag. Sigmund found himself searching for paper in class. Paper was hard to find because he did not have a specific notebook for it.

LOONEY TOONS

Colorful Panels and Pages Trigger Laughter Amongst Humorous Souls

Stretched out on the couch after marching band practice, junior Sarah Krimkowitz channel-surfed looking for cartoons. "I watch the Flintstones and the Jetsons in the afternoon. It gives me time to zone out before I have to do chores or study," Krimkowitz said.

Authors offered readers comic book collections. "Calvin and Hobbes are my favorite. I have all their books except for one, and I read them over again all the time. I was really bummed when Bill Waterson stopped creating them for the paper, but I'm glad he still makes the comic books," freshman Kate Harrell said. Hobbyists had to find new favorites when comic book creators such as Gary Larson of The Far Side retired.

Comic books were collected, traded or read for enjoyment.

"I work with my dad and his company. We try to give comic books to handicapped people because they can't get to the shows themselves. I do mostly grunt work, but I enjoy working with comics. I've been into comics for about seven years. We don't deal with big name books, mostly smaller companies. Sometimes we get artists to work with us. My dad started this because he is handicapped and wanted to help others," freshman Josh Short said.

Channel 41, the Cartoon Network aired cartoons around the clock for cartoon fanatics. Bookstores had special sections for comic books. C & W Used Book Store also offered comic books at a low price.

by Libby Sova

Comics were not only found in newspapers, but also on shirts, calendars, and teachers' walls. Freshman Allen Fournier sports a Far Side shirt by creator Gary Larson. Teachers put Far Side comics on assignments to boost morale.

A magic carpet ride. While watching Aladdin in his fourth period Art II class, sophomore Rob Monastra studies the technique of animation. Viewing cartoons helped students draw and color their own cartoon projects.

I taut I taw a puddy tat! Tweety, a character from Looney Tunes, is safe from the clever cat Sylvester on freshman Jennifer Morales's sweatshirt. Looney Tunes apparel was found in the Warner Brothers Studio Store.

As she glances up from her Freshman Seminar work, freshman Maura Taylor lets classmates admire her hand-drawn cartoon. Taylor used crayons and colored pencils to spice up her artwork. Original cartoons showed creativity.

While waiting for the cars in front of them to move, seniors Todd Yoho and Marc Seguin debate over which radio station to listen to. When carpooling, friends had to compromise on the radio and operation of the air conditioning and heater.

After starting his engine, senior Matt Wesley waits for his car to warm up. He took time to chat with junior Katie Calvin. In order to stay after school, students who were not within walking distance of their homes had to bum rides.

After cheerleading practice, junior Jill Ingram gets ready to drive junior Aubrey Poe home. Underclassmen that needed to stay after school five days a week were given the option of buying parking passes for $10 each season.

After putting her violin in the trunk, junior Carrie Holder starts her car while discussing plans for getting to school the next day with junior Beth Via. Students had to mooch rides when their cars were in the shop being serviced.

With her window rolled down to let the warm afternoon air into her car, senior Angie Delboy laughs over the day's activities with senior Suzanne Dellinger. Driving with friends to and from school gave students more time to talk.

SLUG LINE

Ride Moochers Worm Their Way Into the Cars of Others

While lugging her camera bag and picture information, senior Iyana Tennon ran out her front door and into the waiting car of senior Carlos Howard, who was to drive her to her photo assignments.

"I get rides from people because I'd rather pay 5 dollars for someone else's gas than pay 175 dollars to take road-and-range. Sometimes I take my friends who drive me around out to dinner instead of giving them money," Tennon said. Students who did not own a vehicle relied on friends for transportation.

Avoiding school buses caused students to beg for rides. "I get rides to and from school. I'll ask anybody because I'd rather look around for a ride than have to go on the bus," sophomore Krista Ganela said. Underclassmen weren't given the opportunity to buy parking passes, so they had to ride with juniors or seniors or on the bus.

Students that owned cars found themselves acting as chauffeurs to their friends. "I don't mind giving people rides if they desperately need one, and sometimes I even give people rides at my inconvenience. I'm not going to make them walk to where they need to go if I can help out," junior Andy Tullo said.

Not all drivers were sympathetic toward their friends without cars. "It's annoying when everyday the same people ask you for a ride. Once you say okay once, they keep asking because they think you don't mind," junior Missy Ayers said.

Ride-moochers helped their friends pay for the expenses of driving by contributing money toward gas and parking passes. They also aided in navigating.

by Jennifer Sikorski

"I drive eight people home after Vikettes practice. Before I had a car I always got rides, so now it's my turn."

FLASHBACK

A Totally Tubular Trip to a Radical Decade Gone But Never Forgotten

Famous for its crazy clothes and cheesy movies, the decade of the 80's was not forgotten. "People tend to be dressing more and more trendy these days, and I really hate wearing the same outfit that somebody else has on. All of my clothes come from Goodwill. Everything is from the 80's, the clothes are great because not too many people want to wear them anymore," sophomore Marena Samson said.

80's bands such as REM, Sex Pistols and The Cure remained popular throughout the 90's. "Punk rock in the 80's was so awesome. The bands weren't that talented, but that was cool. Devo, Dexy's Midnight Runners, and so many others. Whenever, It came from the 80's comes on MTV, I don't get out of my chair," junior Tim Azzarano said.

Family togetherness and corny punch lines defined 80's sitcoms. "I like 80's game shows. Let's Make a Deal was the best of all time. It's dumb the way they dress in dorky costumes and win prizes like goats and llamas, but it's so compelling that you have to watch it," freshman Preston Abshire said.

"I'm finding that lately without realizing it, I say rad a lot. I guess it's because I love 80's movies. They rock! Everyone dresses so hilarious and there are always people doing stupid things like guys dressing up as girls just to get a date. It's so funny," junior Sean Lyng said.

The slang terms from the decade could be seen on posters, on television, in magazines, on shirts, in movies and on bumper stickers. Whether students liked it or not, the 80's just would not die.

TWO OF A KIND

Though Physically Different, Friends Found Similarities in Other Areas

Opposites attract, according to junior Allison Sautkulis. "I think it's great that Pat and I are best friends. He keeps better secrets than my girlfriends. Pat is also so easy to talk to. It is fun to be around him because there is no competiton between us," Sautkulis said.

"My best friend and I are totally different yet so alike. Everytime we go out we fight over what to do and where to go. For some reason we always end up having lots of fun. That's why I like her so much," freshman Jose Salmeron said. Due to being opposite gender, differences occured in music, clothes, movies, and foods.

Opposite gender best friends lent insight into the minds of males and females. "My best friend Missy and I talk about stuff that guys and girls are into. One time she gave me advice on how to win this girl's heart. I am glad I turned to her because it really helped me out," senior David Via said. Opposite sex best friends obtained advice on subjects not known by them.

Sometimes being friends with the opposite sex led to a more extensive relationship. "One time I had this really good friend that was a girl. We became really close and started going out. When we broke up our friendship was ruined. After two years we started talking again. Now we hang out all the time," senior Charlie Wilkinson said.

Although students were of different sexes, this didn't get in the way of friendships. Friends of the opposite sex helped to illuminate the complexities of relationships.

SLACKERS

Students Go Against the Norm With Styles All Their Own

As she glanced across her room sophomore Susan Hicks saw her dusty old jeans lying in the corner. "Jeans are boring. Everyone wears them. I like to break away from the norm and wear other kinds of pants every once in a while. I wear plaid pants, slacks, and pants with colors splashed all over them," Hicks said. Non-jean pants lended more variety to students' wardrobes.

"I went with my friend to the Salvation Army to find pants that fit better than jeans. I tried on a pair of blue corduroys and fell in love with them, so I had to buy a couple of pairs. I got some polyester pants there too so that I wouldn't get sick of the cords," sophomore Suzanne Stromire said. Students rummaged through racks of second-hand stores to find vintage clothing.

Coaches didn't allow athletes to wear jeans on game days."I play varsity volleyball, so I have to wear nice dress pants. Sometimes we wear sweatsuits. You supposedly get in trouble if you wear jeans although no one has ever tried it. I guess the captains would yell at you,"junior Melanie White said. Dressy slacks or dress pants were alternatives to jeans on game days.

Jeans came in many different sizes, ranging from small to large and slim to relaxed fit, yet they still did not fit everyone perfectly. "I don't have anymore jeans that fit or don't have rips. I didn't feel like wasting money on buying new ones. I just wear the same pair of khakis everyday. They're much more comfortable than jeans anyway," junior Josh Salzer said.

Material for pants ranged from khaki to polyester to corduroy.

WHAT'S YOUR SIGN

Astrological Predictions and Horoscopes Present an Endless Source for Entertainment

There will be good luck in the upcoming week. The outlook on the love scene is looking positive. Lucky days are 6, 13, 19, and 24. Senior Kristine Curran read her horoscope for Gemini and wondered if it would all come true.

Students found a grain of truth in horoscopes. "I don't live by horoscopes, but for the most part they're true. One time I read my horoscope at the end of the day and it was complete deja vu because everything it said happened. I found money on the way to my car and then my car stalled when I was driving home. That's just what my horoscope said would happen," Curran said.

Students became interested in the character analysis of their particular sign. "I believe in horoscopes because a lot of times they come true. I once received this book all about the sign of Aquarius. The character analysis described me almost perfectly. I thought that was really cool so I have to believe in them," senior Anthony Bellow said.

On the other hand, some students did not partake in reading horoscopes and other astrological predictions. "I never read my horoscope because I just don't believe in that kind of stuff. Astrology isn't for me. I do, however, have some superstitions such as not walking under a ladder. I guess it all depends," freshman Reed Hood said. Students' varying opinions on horoscopes and other astrological subjects created controversy.

In addition to the regular astrological signs, students also found cosmic guidance from the Chinese calendar, which was organized according to year of birth.

EXTRA EXTRA

Magazines and Newspapers Keep Students Aware of World Happenings

Look! It's a reading rainbow!

A plethora of special interest newspapers and underground magazines enabled students to read up on news, fads, sports, music and hobbies. "Rolling Stone and Spin are alike, but I read both because they have everything from music reviews to politics in them," sophomore Morgan Harmon-Sehnal said.

Students also read publications that only covered stories on activities and events they were involved in. "Skateboarding is a major part of my life and so I read anything that will give me new information about it. Transworld Skateboarding is my favorite magazine," sophomore Marc Motyleski said.

Vivid and colorful pictures in magazines offered readers a glimpse at things they would not see otherwise. "The pictures in National Geographic are really beautiful and sometimes show me things I've never seen before. It also has great articles on diverse cultures," junior Jenna Giandoni said.

"My teacher makes my class turn in current events every other day. It's gotten to the point now that I don't even have to remind myself to read the newspaper every night," junior Kristen Nicosia said. Students read daily papers to keep up with current events for personal knowledge or assignments.

Subscriptions to publications made them accesible. "My one-year subscription to Sports Illustrated has saved me almost twenty dollars," senior David Terrell said.

NIT PICKY

Minute Details and Disorder Push Finicky Students Over the Edge

As he pushed with all his might, junior Kevin Fahy tried to cram just one more box into his already overflowing closet. "A few years ago, my room was a complete mess. I couldn't even sleep on my bed, because there was stuff completely covering it. After that, I decided that I would keep my room neat and organized so I wouldn't have that problem again," Fahy said.

Picky students were annoyed by simple things. "I hate using scratch paper. Just the way the word sounds makes it seem disorganized. I have to have a full sheet of paper so I have room to work," freshman Matt Williams said. Paper was only one of the many pet peeves that students had.

"My closet has to be organized exactly how I want it to be. When I hang up clothes, all the hangers have to be going the same way, so that each type of clothing is grouped together," junior Heather Baker said. Students were precise about the organization of their personal space at home.

"My biggest pet peeve is when someone will erase the chalkboard, but they don't erase everything. I feel like getting up and erasing it myself," junior Jennifer Dunn said. Minor details obsessed students who tended to be anal retentive.

"My locker is very organized. Books go on top, and they are arranged from largest on bottom, to smallest on top. On the bottom, I put my binders alternating in the way they face. When something is even slightly out of place, I just completely flip out. I start growling and barking like a dog. It's crazy. WORKING IT

Students Work Out for Both Health and Appearance Reasons

"And one and two and three."

Senior Jeff Mensah counted out loud as he pushed up the barbell. "After the eighth grade I really started caring about my physical appearance. If I skip two weeks of working out I lose all my tone and feel weaker. Then, the following week, it's like I have to start all over again," Mensah said.

The weight room in school provided a place to exercise for free. "I only began working out for soccer in the school weight room. I don't work out any other time besides that, because I don't have to," sophomore Ellie Sachs said.

Unique in their results, students chose exercises for distinct purposes. "I go to step aerobics three times a week at Devils Reach Sport Club. One class consists of an hour of aerobics and a half hour of toning with free weights. I also go to a fifteen minute class that consists of only abdominal workouts," senior Amanda Boyle said. Running and aerobics provided heart conditioning, as well as improved endurance and cardio-vascular fitness.

"I work out twice a week to stay in shape for basketball season. I do a whole lot of running to keep my endurance up for a game," junior Emily Robbins said. Though it could injure the knees, students turned to running to get in shape.

Along with exercising, a balanced diet was crucial to good health. By eating healthy and working out students stayed in shape for athletics and personal reasons.

MIRROR, MIRROR

Groggy eyed, sophomore Myzsa Pennell rolled out of bed an hour before her bus came to get ready for school. Special shampoo, conditioner, a hair dryer, and a barrage of various hair styling products cluttered her bathroom cabinet.

"For 16 years I had straight hair that wouldn't do anything, and then I permed it. It's hard to take care of because you are only suppose to brush it when it's wet. It takes forever in the morning," Pennell said. Besides perming their hair, students could also straighten or dye it.

Facial cleansers aided in pimple prevention and exfoliated skin. "I wash my face two times a day to make sure it doesn't get too dirty. Once when I come home from school with Noxzema Astringent because it's quick. When I take my shower at night I wash my face with Regular Noxzema Cream," sophomore Katherine Ward said.

Beauty supply chains such as The Body Shop, Mary Kay, Avon and Bath and Body Works carried a wide selection of beauty products like shower gel, lotions, and perfumes. The beauty chains also carried lines of products for men.

"I use lots of items from Bath and Body Works. I have the shower gel, body splash, lotion, and cream all in the country apple scent. I receive compliments a lot. Even if you can't smell it on me all the time, it makes me feel special and nice to have it on," junior Missy Shank said.

There were other ways to enhance one's appearance. Braces straightened teeth to enhance student's smiles and manicures created a new look for fingernails. Along with daily routines, students also took time for mud masks.

BUMPER CARS

In the Jam Packed Parking Lot, Students Face Off Bumper to Bumper

"Don't you dare cut me off!" junior Rachel Rogoziniski yelled, as not one, but two cars pulled out in front of her. She slammed on the brakes, in fear she would hit the cars. School buses had the right of way in the student parking lot so students had to contend with traffic jams caused by buses as well as the 500 other students' cars.

"The worst part about the parking lot is trying to leave school. There are so many cars, that when you try to pull out you have to wait to get out of your spot, but if you get out of the building at ten after you have to wait for buses," Rogoziniski said.

Students had to move their cars out of the student lot for marching band practices. Practices were scheduled for Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays at 2:30, starting the first week of school and ending in November. Students became aware of the rule when the band stuck notices that were meant to discourage violations to their cars.

"One time I stayed after for a soccer meeting and I got a parking violation sticker on my car, because I couldn't get out of my meeting. When I finally got out the guy tried taking it off my car but he left half of it on. I had to use a razor blade to take it off," junior Ben Plummer said.

Students faced the problem of getting into the lot. The stoplight turned green long enough to let students out into the intersection but not long enough allow the buses to go. This created a problem with students getting stuck in the middle of the intersection when the light turned red. The thousands of commuters on their way to work took to honking to get the students to move.

FOOT FETISH

Style, Comfort and Weather Influences Individuals' Footwear Decisions

Just before the beginning of her Cross Country race, senior Jennifer McNamara changed from her flip-flops to her running shoes. "I wear my Adidas sandals up until the time when I warm up with my running shoes on. Wearing my sandals relaxes me before a race," McNamara said. Wearing sandals gave a loose feeling to the feet.

"I like to wear tennis shoes over sandals because they are more comfortable, Reeboks are the most comfortable shoes to wear," sophomore Nicole Wadley said.

Comfort for fixed environments played a role in footwear decisions. "It's hard to sit in class with shoes on but with sandals, it's not as hot. I wear my Adidas flip flops because they are the most comfortable," junior Beth Pedigo said. Sandals kept feet cool and comfortable for extended periods of time.

Shoes however, provided more protection and warmth than sandals. "I don't even own a pair of sandals. I've just never liked them, even when I was a kid. Wearing sandals is like the same thing as going barefoot. I can see why other people wear them, but I prefer shoes," junior Ben Wilhite said.

"During the summer I wear sandals because we're not in school and because it's hot. I prefer to wear shoes though because they're more comfortable. And then I don't have to worry that people are always going to be looking at my toes," sophomore Juliet Hoyt said.

Coming Home to an Empty House Gives Students a Taste of Freedom

Silence greeted junior Beth

Latchkey kids were home alone after school. "I like going home and immediately being able to sit down and watch TV without having anyone start whining for me to do my homework," Tomchek said.

Students invited friends over to keep them company, but had to be careful not to break anyhing. "Sometimes I have some friends over before my parents get home, but it's okay since they don't make a mess," freshman Donna Ohs said.

Students could be themselves when they were alone. "I vividly remember one time when I thought that I was alone so I began singing loudly in the living room. I didn't notice my boyfriend pulling up in the driveway. He saw me and was laughing at me through the window," senior Emanita Dewitt said.

Students had an additional responsibilities when they were required to watch over their siblings. "I watch my brother when he gets home. He normally doesn't give me any problems because he goes out to play with his friends." freshman Marianne Benson said.

Younger brothers and sisters were not always easy to keep track of. "My brother used to do some really weird things. One time I came home, only to discovered that he was on the roof with his friends!" senior Katie Woodside said.

While she sat at her desk doing an English assignment, sophomore Meghan McLaurin twirled her hair to stay focused. Fiddling with her hair was a habit McLaurin could not kick during class.

"I can't stand to sit perfectly still. It drives me crazy. If I am somewhere I can't move around a lot, I just twirl my hair to keep moving. I've done it so much, I doubt I could ever stop," McLaurin said.

Bored students fidgeted in class. "During tests, I have trouble sitting still because there's not enough excitement going on around me, and if I'm sitting at a table, the table shakes from me kicking it and every one gets mad at me," senior Ryan Gardiner said. Students had to sit still and concetrate longer in the new 85 minute classes.

Nervous habits disrupted class. "Last year, during an English test, I was kicking the desk in front of me, because I was finished early. The girl in the desk got really mad and turned around to yell at me. Then the teacher got mad at both of us," sophomore Geoff Grogan said.

School supplies held a double life fulfilling entertainment purposes for the bored. Students drew with various writing utensils."I have no attention span. When I get bored I draw, because it is something to do. I have these huge markers that I bring to class and draw with them to keep myself occupied," freshman Mike Scites said.

GET THEIR KICKS

Martial Arts Classes Provide Students With a Physically Challenging Outlet

"Hi-yah!" senior Jason Gillespie yelled as he threw a punch into the air. Gillespie practiced sparring, fighting with little to no physical contact, during his complimentary Tae Kwon Do lesson. Students were encouraged to take advantage of the free lessons the schools offered.

Students competed in exhibitions, matches, and tournaments. The practicing paid off when students received medals and trophies for their accomplishments.

"One of the most exciting experiences for me was winning two gold medals in the Junior Olympics. My school also had a demonstration team, which travelled all over northern Virginia and D.C. performing different skills," senior Nichole St. Germain said.

While students were busy perfecting their techniques, accidents happened. "At my last match before I stopped studying Kempo, I thought I was hot and could fight really well. I ended up competing against a black belt who gave me a couple of bruised ribs," senior Valentin Sanchez said. Sanchez was a blue belt at the time of the match that caused his injury.

Students had the opportunity to advance with a system of belts, symbolizing a mastery of techniques. "I'm a yellow belt with a green stripe in Tae Kwon Do. The stripe symbolizes the seventh gup. I started at the 12th gup and have been working my way down. I'm hoping to be at the next level soon," freshman Alicia Webb said. Black belts were the highest obtainable degree in Tae Kwon Do.

Pretty in pink. With curlers in her hair, ear to the phone and the television remote in her hand, senior Monique Brown is ready for an evening in her bedroom. Students found distractions to keep them from going to sleep on time.

While looking through her dresser drawers, junior Lee Pettey searches for a pair of socks to wear with her pajamas. Totes slippers and thick socks were worn to keep warm, since 60 percent of all body heat was lost through the feet.

With a quick look to see if anyone is watching her, junior DeAnna Thorstad sneaks out of her bedroom window. If inside and outside temperatures permitted, students wore shorts and T-shirts to fend off the nightly heat wave.

NIGHTIE NIGHT

Students Dressed According to the Weather, Comfort and Style at Moonrise

As he rummaged through his drawers, opening and shutting each one, junior Pat Barren reached in and dug out clothing for bed.

"I don't really care what I wear to bed because I don't see anybody. I just dig through my drawers till I find some boxers and an old T-shirt," Barren said. Comfort was a primary factor when finding something to wear to sleep.

Students picked out matching tops and bottoms on their pajamas. "I have white cotton pajamas with basketballs all over them. I also wear these flourescent pink socks to bed," freshman Amanda Jacob said. Pajama designs revealed students' hobbies and interests.

"For my birthday, we had a pajama party, and my friend gave me flannel PJ's with the feet on them. They were white with different pastel colored butterflies on them. It was the perfect gift because she knows I love butterflies," junior Meghan Moore said. Pajamas were personal gifts between friends.

Silk sleepwear turned out to be a more expensive choice among students, in contrast to boxer shorts and matching pajama tops and bottoms. "To bed, I wear Victoria's Secret silk boxers with pink and white flowers, and a matching tank top," junior Tracee Cook said.

Silk was a summer fabric, while flannel was worn in the winter to keep warm. "I love to bundle up in my plaid flannel pajamas when it's cold outside. I also wear fuzzy socks to keep my toes warm," sophomore Cristin Frederick said.

Pajamas were worn to school to show spirit on Pajama Day or just as a fashion statement.

TOYS ARE US

From Microscopic Trinkets to Life-sized Dolls Students Amused Themselves

"Bang! Pow! Get out of my way!"

senior Francisco Portell screamed as he re-enacted a battle of the Transformers he had just watched on televison. Although students had homework and other activities, they found extra time to put aside to play with their favorite toys.

"Nobody can tell me that the Transformers aren't the ultimate toys. Just examine the name. They are always triumphing over the evil Decepticonz and their vile leader Megatron. I love to get my Transformers out of my attic and re-enact battles. I really miss those exciting Christmas mornings when all the latest Transformers would be waiting for me," Portell said.

Among the toys students enjoyed playing with, action figures were popular. Transformers, Star Wars, Power Rangers and GI Joe figures were available at local stores.

"Sometimes when I have nothing else to do, I play with my Power Rangers. I have a safety box in which I keep them. I used to belong to the Power Rangers Club. I don't let anyone touch them because I know that some day they will be worth some money," sophomore Clemente Santiago said. Toys proved to be a profitable past time.

Toys also gave families a reason to spend time together. "For my birthday, my dad gave me a boomerang. Now we have this thing when we go outside on the weekends together and play with it. It was really hard to get the hang of, but because I use it a lot, it's not that bad. It's a lot of fun," junior Hilary Hansen said.

Whether students had collections of Transformers or My Little Ponies, time was made for fun.

To relieve the daily stress of school senior Seth Lowery takes out his Transformers and begins to play with them. Playing with toys distracted students from worrying about the hassles that they encountered each day.

"Please bring me some good luck!" junior Joy Vajirapinyo says, as she rubs her lucky troll doll's hair. Toys could not only be used for recreational activities, but also as good luck charms for help in school on tests or presentations.

How much is that doggie in the window? Freshmen Erin Smith and Barbara Bowyer take time out of the school day to play with a stuffed animal that Smith received for her birthday. Toys were given in lieu of more serious gifts.

Keep your eye on the ball! Junior Cassandra Weddel and Becky Shifflett played with army men, Mickey Mouse and bouncy balls while waiting for the brass section to finish practicing a move during marching band practice after school.

Careful concentration is the key to building a sturdy shelter. Sophomore Scott Watkins sets up a tent in his backyard. To set up Watkins had to lay out the tent and hammer stakes into the ground.

As morning breaks, freshman Octavio Paguaga remains snuggled in his sleeping bag. An alternative to sleeping under the cover of tents on camping trips was sleeping outside underneath the stars in sleeping bags to be close to nature.

While packing for a camping trip senior Andrew Walhquist opens his tent to air it out and rid it of any odors and dampness. During the summer Walhquist attended a survival camp that required him to learn how to use and care for his tent.

GREAT OUTDOORS

Students Took Weekend Excursions to Get Away From Life's Worries

Bzzz. The biting insects swarmed around junior Melissa Handy's tent. Insects were just one of the many problems that student campers had to endure while out in the wilderness. " I had to camp out for my job, the Renaissance Fair. The drive home was long, so we camped for two nights a week. There were so many bugs, and it was impossible to get rid of them. The whole idea of it was fun at first, but then it got old really fast," Handy said.

Campers adjusted their sleeping arrangements in order to dodge the bugs. "My friends and I went camping a few days before school started. We all had our sleeping bags, but not tents. Halfway through the night the bugs got really bad so I took my sleeping bag and slept in the back of my friend's truck," senior Lindsay Owens said. To avoid these pests, campers used bug spray and other bug ridding devices.

In addition to bugs, other creatures inhabited the students' camping grounds. "When I went camping with four of my friends we only had two sleeping bags. My one friend and I had to sleep in my friend's car, it was in the middle of the night and one of the guys who had a sleeping bag woke up and saw four raccoons staring down in the hatchback my friend and I were in," senior Seth Lowery said.

Even though bugs and other of nature's creatures affected the campers on their trips it did not stop them from traveling back to nature and away from the suburbs.

Concern for comfort prompts senior Tom Shin to blow up his inflatable air mattress before going camping. Packing only light things made hiking to a campsite more bearable and comfortable because of less weight in the bag.

Go away! Senior Laban Johnson glares at his cat as it pulls the thread away from the machine. Johnson was finishing a hem on his bathrobe. Students found that hemming their clothes was a convenient and fairly inexpensive fix.

"I've learned to hem and sew busted buttons back on. With my mom always at work, I know how to fend for myself," junior Steven Smith said. Students used sewing machines for hems, while hand sewing a button back on was easier.

Whoa, shiny stuff! Senior Jenny Williamson peruses the merchandise at Jo-Ann Fabrics. Williamson was looking for fabric to make a new skirt. Making their own clothes instead of buying them left students with a little extra cash.

BITS 'N PIECES

Students Alter, Hem, Rip and Stitch to Express Their Talent and Individuality

The loud whir of the sewing machine masked all other sounds as junior Beth Via sewed a bag she started over the summer.

"I first learned how to sew in Home Ec. classes in middle school. My mom helped me a little but basically I taught myself how to do everything else. Whenever I'm bored in the summer I make things like dresses, bags or pj's," Via said. Students sewed in their spare time.

"I usually sew things that I design myself. Once I made a pair of pants with a stripe down the legs for my sister. People are surprised to discover that I made them, and that I used my own pattern," junior DeAnna Thorstad said.

Students either used a pattern or followed an original idea, according to their individual talents. Creating their own pattern allowed for a more exact size of clothing.

Homemade apparel was rewarding in more ways than one. "There was a contest once at a fabric store when I was little to create a shirt. I designed an octopus and sewed it onto a T-shirt. It went to States and then to Nationals and I won. The prize was a $200 savings bond," senior Stephanie Daniels said. Contests hosted by sewing shops and fabric stores prompted creativity.

Students found it necessary to alter and mend clothing when it was imperfect. "I don't actually sew my own clothes, but I know how to make small changes like shortening my pants or mending a tear," freshman Amanda Jacobs said.

Students purchased material, trimmings, and sewing supplies from various sewing shops. Learning how to sew was passed down to students from parents, grandparents, relatives or friends.

ROOM FOR DECOR

With Unusual Pictures and Trinkets Rooms Were Far From Normal

A bookshelf here, a poster

there, scattered clothes everywhere. Students expressed individuality through their rooms.

Students decorated their rooms to personalize the atmosphere. Having a room of their own meant that students decorated according to their personal tastes.

"Pez are my favorite thing in the whole world. I have about 40 dispensers on a shelf in my room. I have a lava lamp that turns my room red when the lights are off. On another shelf I have toys that I've kept since I was a kid," sophomore Bailey Sautkulis said. Students kept trinkets and knick-knacks for their sentimental value.

"I decided that the year before seventh grade I needed more privacy so I moved downstairs to the guest bedroom in the basement. My room is huge, so I decorated it with signs. I have an old couch from the 70's on one side and since I'm not allowed to start fires in my fireplace, I put shopping bags in it," junior Kim Fisher said. Unusual decorations were found in places such as flea markets and garage sales.

"I love fairies, gnomes, and elves, so I wanted my room to remind me of being in the forest with them. I painted them on my door and around my mirror with paint," junior Elizabeth Roque said.

Personalizing rooms meant changing furniture around and adding color. Flyers, street signs, pictures and posters decorated the walls of students' rooms.

by Hilary Hansen

The illumination of the black light casts a purplish glow over the posters on the wall as senior Eric Spickelmeyer relaxes on the bed. Students used various lighting techniques to create a different effect for decorating their rooms.

Pez dispensers all in a row. For sophomore Melody Thorstad collections were a way to decorate her room. In addition to the stuffed animals, Thorstad had a little corner for her dog, Beaner, with blankets and dog comics on the wall.

It's a balancing act. Senior Julie Foxworthy tries to balance her incense burner on top of her lava lamp. The lava lamp was a Christmas present from her mom and her dad brought her the incense burner from England.

Marian Gryder

Bead it! Freshman Shelby Williams substitutes a closet door for a beaded curtain. Beads added color and a unique touch to her room. Williams also decorated her room with photographs of friends, posters and a string of colored lights.

Clickety, clack! While she types her paper for school, senior Amy Stedman glances at her wall for inspiration. Students tacked and taped cut outs from magazines on their walls as a cheap alternative to more expensive posters.

While selling the school's literary magazine, Eddas, during her lunch, senior Emanita Dewitt finishes her homework. Students used dressing up as an alternative to everyday attire, or when their ordinary clothes were in the wash.

ALL DOLLED UP

Something was horribly out of place as senior George Flynn waited to give his presentation. He decided to straighten his tie and noticed that the tag on the back of it was ripped.

"I usually put the thin part of my tie through the tag loop on the back. One day the tag ripped off, and I had to staple it right before my presentation so it wouldn't swing all around," Flynn said.

Coaches and Activities Director Wes Bergazzi required that athletes dress up for sports competitions. "I have to dress up for basketball games. Coaches say it looks professional, we are supposed to represent our school," junior Emily Robbins said. Dressing up also consisted of wearing team uniforms to school.

Besides being a personal choice, students were obliged to dress up. "Dressing up to me is putting on nice pants, a nice shirt, and a tie. I dress up like that for orchestra concerts and church. I wouldn't dress up if it was my choice. I do it when my parents say to," sophomore Jeff Ray said.

Looking nice was a problem when students faced uncomfortable situations. "One day I wore my tights to P.E. We did aerobics and I got a huge hole in my tights. I wore them like that the rest of the day," junior Julie Burns said. Due to the short life of pantyhose, girls were equipped with nail polish or hairspray to mend runs.

In order to differentiate themselves from the thousands of other people in the school, students dressed up.

While meeting at their lockers, seniors Michele Brebnor and Shawn Thompson discuss the happenings of their school day. On days that students dressed up, they found that matching accessories complemented outfits.

As he checks himself out in the mirror, sophomore Kenny Villagomez gets ready for work. Certain jobs required their workers to dress up in formal clothes. Students also dressed nicely when going on job interviews.

All tied up. Sophomore Ernest Bannister puts the finishing touches on his outfit for school. Bannister, like other students, considered dressing up to be a nice shirt and pants. Jeans were also worn with dress shirts to complete outfits.

When the traditional brown carpet was replaced with a lighter gray one and white tiles were laid near the upstairs lobby, the school was seen through a whole new light. This change required students to go against their old lunchtime habits and find other places to eat, since they weren't allowed to eat on the new floors.

Meanwhile, Prince William County Police rounded up people from surrounding communities to search the woods for two-year old Karynne Sheldon, who disappeared from Manassass, ten days before Halloween. Due to combined efforts her body was discovered in the Occoquan River near Davis Ford Road. This tragic occurrence caused people of the metropolitan area to break away from their daily routines and work together.

It was also through combined efforts that students made it through the halls safely. With 85 minute blocks, students had an extra three minutes between classes, but they continued to use the excuse that the crowded halls prevented them from getting to class on time. The overcrowding became acute when it was noted that the area outside the Social Studies pod was suitable for crowd surfing.

Even with the fewer breaks students still saw new faces everyday until it seemed as if the people were literally coming out of the woodwork

The student body, 3000 strong, roared as James Brown "got down" on the floor of the gym. Mr. Robinson, clad in a black cape and wig, lip synced to the James Brown tune, "Get Up Off Of That." The falculty members impersonated various rock stars for the entertainment of the student body at the Homecoming pep rally on October 18. In addition to the lip syncing there were students displaying their break dancing skills, the Vikette dance team performed to "Come On And Ride It (the Train)," the football team presented the dancers with the traditional red roses and Larry Johnson, the assisant director of VHSL presented the award for good sportsmanship to Brian Blackburn of the state champion soccer team.

Iyana Tennon

AGAINST ALL ODDS

Marching to the beat of their own drummer and on a brand new surface, the senior class was the first to have its recessional march on the new track.

The Athletic Boosters paid for the $60,000 track which was made of recycled rubber. The new track allowed athletes to wear spiked shoes, to improve their time and to prevent injuries.

Applications, videos to colleges and internet access were made more readily available to inquiring seniors. On October 18 the senior class won the banner, float, and spirit awards at Homecoming.

Despite complications with college applications and the 4 X 4 scheduling seniors were able to kick back at the All - Night Grad Party held at Devil's Reach Sports Club.

DESPITE EFFORTS TO GO SLEEPLESS TO BED, SENIORS REMAINED in bed, laying in darkness, senior Anthony Bello stared at the wall. It was early in the morning and he still hadn't fallen asleep.

"I only sleep two or three hours a night, and even then I keep waking up. I'm always tired at school, so I take naps when I get home," Bello said.

Seniors had remedies to make themselves fall asleep at night in order to stay awake during class. "When I can't sleep, I drink herbal tea. It's warm, and the aroma makes me sleepy," senior Alicia Massey said.

Jobs that demanded late working hours were another reason students couldn't sleep. "I work at the Chesapeake Bagel Bakery, and I have to close. I lose sleep because I have to do my homework afterwards so I'm always tired at school," senior Justin Worrilow said. With the stress of a job and schoolwork, seniors learned how to balance time.

"I try to get a good night's sleep before tests, quizzes, and S.A.T.'s, but usually I just don't sleep a lot at night," senior Tom Shin said.

Reports recommended that students get eight to nine hours of sleep a night.

thumbs twirling, red faced and stuttering every other word, senior Mike McCaffrey tried to talk to a girl he liked. "I have a hard time talking the first time to girls I like. I get so nervous and fidget a lot, then walk away feeling stupid," McCaffrey said.

Seniors found they were prone to embarrassing themselves in high-profile situations such as class presentations, dances, formal dinners and induction ceremonies.

"At the end of my first date with this girl, I pulled into her driveway behind her dad's truck. I leaned over to kiss her, and my foot slipped off the brake and I smashed right into the back of the truck. Worst about it, I hadn't even met her parents yet," senior Knute Broady said.

AFTER FOUR YEARS SENIORS LOUNGE ACT TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THE

the pungent smell of taco salad and pizza filled the air. Although the smell was similar to the upper cafeteria, the senior lounge provided a change from eating near the regular hordes of people.

Reasons such as size and noise were factors in the decision of whether or not to eat in the lounge. "It's small and quiet which is why I eat there. The line is always short, but it has the same food as the real cafeteria," senior Nick Paciejewski said.

The senior lounge provided an escape from the noisy halls and cafeterias. "I eat in the Senior Lounge so I don't have to sit on the floor in the hallway or listen to other people's conversations," senior BrookeTaylor said. The lounge offered an alternative to the limited seating arrangement in the regular cafeterias.

"We've waited four years and finally we're allowed in there. It's great to relax with your peers without underclassmen all around," senior Christina Anderson said.

The lines in the lounge were short and quick. This made it more attractive for underclassmen to sneak in and try to eat their lunch.

"I write letters to my boyfriend and we talk on the phone a lot. Occasionally he comes to see me or I go down and watch his soccer games," Hollar said. She and her boyfriend decided to stay together after he graduated.

Seniors had various means of communication for keeping in touch with their significant others. "I e-mail my boyfriend a couple times a day. Since he's in North Carolina, it's easier and cheaper to e-mail him. At least it gives us an opportunity to communicate quickly," senior Kristin Buckstad said.

Costs of keeping close included long distance phone rates, online fees, postage stamps, and rising gas prices. "Pat and I not only love each other, we are best friends and we respect each other and that is more important than the distance between us," senior Amanda Shroeder said.

Seniors juggled part time jobs and borrowed money to help finance their ongoing college relationships.

with a look of grim determination, senior Ron Manly looked up and down the row of lockers in hopes that his partner would show up to open their locker. Students were coupled randomly so if they forgot the combination they had to track down a stranger to get it.

The administration paired students by grade level and gender. Although it was possible to be paired with friends, the majority were paired with strangers.

"I think the locker system is stupid. There are more important problems in the school they aren't paying attention to," senior Jenny Williamson said.

The fact that their new locker partner could potentially be a stranger created an issue with the students. "I think we should be allowed to pick our partners ourselves, because when they're assigned, you don't know any thing at all about your new locker partner," senior Victoria Leavelle said.

Students who knew their partners were indifferent to the new rule. "I got a friend, so I didn't have to worry about a weirdo as a partner," senior Mike Hicks said.

as he searches through his refrigerator, senior Greg Zumbrook looks for something to eat. Staying up late to do homework made students hunt for food to satisfy their hunger.

AT NIGHT, SENIORS WENT OUT OF MUNCH ON THEIR WAY TO FIND SOMETHING TO

grumble grumble. Awakened by his stomach growling, senior Ryan Huling looked at the clock and decided it was time for a midnight snack. "Every night at 12:30 am I go downstairs to get a bowl of ice cream. For some strange reason the coldness gives me a really weird sensation inside that helps me get back to sleep," Huling said.

Fruits and vegetables were considered an essential part of a balanced diet. "I try to eat at least three pieces of fruit a day to help boost my energy. I eat a granola bar, and have a drink of orange juice in the morning for breakfast ," senior Nancy Rosenow said. After school, students ate to rejuvenate their bodies.

Students munched on snacks after school from fast food restaurants such as Taco Bell, McDonald's, Chesapeake Bagel Bakery, Wendy's, Burger King, Fred's Pizzaria and Baskin Robbins.

"As soon as the bell rings my friends and I go to McDonald's. One time they ran out of fries so I had to go ten minutes out of my way just to get a supersized fry. It made me be late for work," senior Scott Marshall said.

The key to Matt Burton's big plum Volvo station wagon, which his family bought while in Europe in the '80's, turned slowly and the engine sputtered to life. Due to his car's Swedish heritage, Burton named his car Olaf.

Seniors personalized, named, and decorated their cars. Anything from makeup bags to scientific experiments made their homes in students' cars.

"In my friend's car we keep a bottle of Coke that we're trying to let ferment. Now it's got white blood cell-looking things in it," senior Brian Wurster said.

Students that owned their own cars didn't have to depend on others for transportation. "Having your car is the first step to independence. You form responsibilities. No one can tell you how to manage it," senior Samantha Gross said.

Vehicles proved to be expensive to maintain since gas rang in at $1.34 a gallon.

in search of the ignition switch, senior Nicole Whitfield shuts her car door while trying to put the key in at the same time. Whitfield went home before field hockey practice to drop off her books and school things. Going home offered seniors a chance to change clothes and grab a bite to eat before heading back for their activities.

with the after school rush to get out of the student parking lot at two o'clock every afternoon and to avoid the 20 minute wait behind the line of yellow school buses, senior Amber Lockhart checks her mirror before driving against the flow of traffic. The student parking lot provided spaces for 575 cars with only one exit.

WEARING CONTACT LENSES FOUR EYES CREATED A SIGHT FOR

with her bow in position, senior Brittany Lipinski flipped the page of her music. She blinked away the tears in her eyes as she tried not to lose her place. "When I stare at my music in orchestra, my contacts dry out and my eyes start to water," Lipinski said. Dry eyes could cause contacts to fall out.

The choice to wear contact lenses was a personal decision. "I like to wear contacts instead of glasses because my glasses kept breaking and I always lost them. I can just leave my contacts in for months at a time," senior Talton Pettigrew said. Students based their decisions on preference and their lifestyle.

"I was dancing at the Smokin' Grooves concert and this big guy in front of me accidentally poked me in the eye. My contact fell out and I didn't think Iwould find it because it was so dark, but some of the people I was with helped me find it," senior Danny Wittman said.

Students chose from a wide variety of contact lenses. Hard, soft, gas permiable, and disposable contacts were available to students. Color lenses were also available.

in his Isuzu Tracker, senior Matt Skeele starts up the engine to head off to a party at his friend's house. Skeele's curfew had been extended to allow him to stay out later as he got older. Skeele spent the extra time with friends, at parties, or just hanging out.

Carter Elmore

"I can't believe he fumbled that pass!" After a Friday night football game, seniors Marilynn Monroe and Carlos Howard talk about the game that took place only a few hours before. Seniors that didn't have curfews stayed out as late as they wanted on the weekend.

WITH CHANGES IN CURFEWS TO NIGHT OWLS LATER HOURS SENIORS BECAME

from being home before the street lights came on to staying out until the sun rose, seniors experienced changes in their curfews as they grew up.

As the years passed by, parents trusted their children with responsibility, so their curfews expanded.

"My parents feel that I've matured in the past few years, so my curfew has gone from 11 pm during my freshman year to 2 am now on weekends. I spend a lot of the extra time at parties," senior Marc Seguin said. Students gained more trust from their parents as they grew older.

Prince William County discussed having a curfew which would require all children under the age of 17 to be in after 11 pm.

This curfew was not adopted. This meant seniors only had to deal with worried and frantic parents instead of disgruntled police officers when they arrived home after their anticipated time.

where's it at? Senior Martha Diehl rummages through her coat pockets in search of her self tanning lotion from Belgium. "The American stuff turned my skin orange," Diehl said.

SENIORS RESORT TO LOTIONS FAKE BAKES AND TANNING SALONS FOR

with a grimace, senior Elizabeth Eldreth slipped on her bookbag, carefully placing the wide straps over her newly tanned skin, made sensitive by a salon. "I didn't like the tanning salon the first time I went. My grandma took me and I ended up with heat rash and 'sun' poisoning," Eldreth said.

Seniors weighed their options equally before deciding to tan or not to tan. "I want to try a tanning salon but I hear you can get bacteria or sick from them easily because if they're not clean, the warmth will breed nasty bacteria," senior Julie Foxworthy said.

The risks, to their looks and their health, caused students to steer clear of tanning salons in favor of a safer method.

Creams and lotions provided the glow seniors were looking for, without the dangers associated with tanning salons. The results, however, were not perfect.

"Once when I used a tanning cream, my knees and ankles turned orange," senior Claire Johnson said.

The multitude of products and facilities such as Apollo Tanning and Perfections educated seniors about whether or not to "fake bake."

WITH THE CHOICE TO BE DRUG FREE SENIORS WERE NAILED TO THE 'X'

"I've got straight-edge." The sounds of Minor Threat could be heard playing a decade and a half after the songs were written. The term was coined by Ian MacKaye of Minor Threat when he wrote a song with the title in 1980.

The word straight-edge, literally means to have an edge on life, because one is drug free, or straight. Students interpretated it differently, but consistently it meant staying sober.

Being labeled straight-edge did not apply to all types of people. "Straight-edge is a label. Based on my definition, I am straight-edge, though I don't think about it because it's a way of life I've always known," senior Lisa Hale said.

Not all seniors were in agreement with being straight-edge. "There's no such thing as straight-edge. You would have to be free of all drugs, even ones like caffeine and tylenol," senior Travis Dunn said.

The senior class had four senior skip days as opposed to two for the year. One senior skip day was held on the 97th day , as if school was held on the seven period day schedule. The senior class also held a senior skip day on the 48th day; counting "every day as if it were two." The administration did not condone either of the skip days, requiring teachers to call and inform parents of their students' absence.

Seniors purchased parking decals in order to park in the student parking lot. Seniors were the only students who were permitted to buy parking stickers for the entire year. The stickers were priced at $30 for the year and $14 for half the year. Year stickers were gray and half year stickers were blue. Unlike underclassmen, seniors were not required to stay after school five times a week in order to obtain a decal.

AGAINST THE NORM

With two years under their belts, juniors faced Mr. Watts and school security as they were finally permitted to park in the school parking lot. To obtain a parking pass, juniors were required to stay after school five times a week for practices, tutorials, clubs and publications.

Upstairs lockers adjacent to the main office were reserved for the junior class; leaving the downstairs lockers to freshmen and sophomores.

Juniors were the last class to take Physical Education classes with 45 minute classes on the seven period schedule. The new schedule made P.E. 85 minutes long.

To be exempt from exams juniors had to maintain an A for both semesters and do well on their midterms. Exemptions were a much debated topic among students and teachers since no one was ever certain about them.

third time's the charm

for juniors who Work it Good

During their junior year, students were given the opportunity to take classes with 5 points of credit.

With his eyes transfixed on the AP American History assignment, two computerized beeps sounded, interrupting junior Mitch Johnson's concentration. His clock read 11am.

In balancing homework and activities, busy juniors stayed up late in an attempt to fit all of their work in.

"I think that junior year is the hardest, because not only do you have to get the best grades you can, but you have to be involved with clubs or sports, so colleges think you are an all-around good student," Johnson said.

Junior year was the last year students had before it was time to decide upon a future or fill out college applications. "The classes you take junior year are much harder, and give you more work. It's the last year you can pull up your GPA before colleges get to see it," junior Joey Gallagher said.

Students were eligible for National Honor Society and Beta Club in 11th grade.

"In sports, this is the year colleges look at for recruiting. So I have to do well in volleyball, and have an equally impressive transcript."

"this is so great," junior Meggan Curtin mumbled as a Dodge pulled in front of her. She slammed on the brakes, and shifted into reverse. Someone had stolen her parking place.

"I parked on Valleywood Drive in the beginning of the year. I had to get up early and could never find a spot since I have no clue how to parallel park," Curtin said.

Due to limited space, parking spots in the lot were reserved for seniors. The remaining spots were given to juniors involved in activities. Those not involved found alternate places. "I don't want to deal with everyone on Valleywood screaming at me, and I don't want to get up early to ride the bus, so I just park at the elementary school. I don't have to worry about tardies," junior Vivian Vargas said.

Juniors had to be careful of where they parked to make sure they were not blocking any driveways or getting in anyone's way.

"The music is much louder on the lower level. My ears were ringing after leaving the pep rally. I couldn't concentrate when I got to my next class," junior Quiana Gardner said.

Sitting closer to the cheerleaders and band gave juniors the opportunity to interact with pep rally activities.

"It's good that we get to sit on the floor this year because when we were up so high we felt so far away from all of the excitement," junior Cory Northington said.

The lower levels were dismissed first after pep rallies ended. "The bad thing is that we leave the gym first, so we get back to class," junior Erin Quaderer said.

A limited number of pep rallies were scheduled due to the 4 by 4 schedule.

"My friend drives me to school every morning but she has cheerleading practice so I have to ride the bus home. She lives down the street from me so it's convenient," Price said.

In their junior year, students had their first chance to drive to school. "Driving myself is better than riding the bus. I can come to school as late or as early as I want," junior Tommy Quimby said.

Driving was expensive because of parking stickers, gas and insurance. "In the morning, I get a ride with my friend because I helped buy the parking sticker. After school I get a ride with one of the girls on field hockey," junior Eryn Lyga said.

For students that did not purchase parking stickers, parking on Oakwood and Valleywood was available.

prom caused juniors to pursue that Perfect Promise after taking a long, deep breath, junior Josh Abrams summoned up the courage to ask his chosen friend to Prom. Abrams' fear of rejection had kept him from asking her in the past.

"I would rather have someone ask me but I guess I think that it's the guy's job to ask. It's nerve-racking to ask someone," junior Josh Abrams said.

As times changed, it became customary for girls to do the asking. "I think that I would like to be asked by a guy, but because everything is changing and the times have become so unconventional, girls just need to suck it in and start doing the asking. It's not that bad," junior Tracy Clemons said.

Students realized it did not matter who asked whom. "Prom isn't that big of a deal. I mean, if you want to ask someone, just do it," junior Tony Turchiano said.

Students who went as friends split the cost of dinner and the tickets.

"Learning to drive a stick is kind of a pain. Some people pick it up really quickly while others need time to figure it out. Once you get the hang of it though it's kind of fun because you can drive faster than anyone else on the road," Roach said.

How long it took to learn how to drive a stick shift depended on who the students chose to teach them. "If you have a teacher who is experienced and has driven for years, you can learn in about a week." junior Simon Baldwin said. Students chose teachers based on experience and patience.

There were five different gears that students had to manually shift in order to travel at different speeds. Stick shifts were also known as manual transmissions.

AGAINST THE CURB

With the opportunity to advance in their studies, sophomores filled their schedules with two semesters' worth of advanced classes. The 4 by 4 gave them the chance to fulfill course requirements early.

The advantage of not paying the 9 dollars created a waiting list for the PSAT's. Students who checked the box on the test form found their mailboxes flooded with information from college and scholarships programs.

Sophomores were grouped according to their birthdays for the driver's education classes, which consisted of classsroom, road and range. The classroom segment was taught by their PE teachers, while road and range were taught by Mrs. Bell, Mr. Rodgers, and Mr. Sorrell.

looks of frustration crossed sophomore Mekhla Darshan's face as she attempted to remember an answer to a question on her English exam. "I think having midterms hurt my grades because teachers didn't have enough time to go over things. I didn't get the good grades that I usually expect," Darshan said.

The administration announced that, despite what was previously decided, both midterms and finals were given. "I was upset about having midterms because it was hard to fully prepare in so little time," sophomore Carina Lilly said.

Because the semester was so short, midterms gave students a chance to raise their grades. "I hated having to take them, but they probably helped my grades because they were easy," sophomore Victor Blocker said.

On the days exams were held, students were released two and a half hours early.

stumbling down the hall, sophomore Matt Ledbetter carried the new red hall pass. "When I walk down the hallways teachers notice the pass. How could you miss it? It is so big!" Ledbetter said.

Teachers kept records as to how many times students left class on the hall pass. "Since the passes are reusable, my teachers can tell how many times I have left the room. Once I had to go to the bathroom and my teacher went to write my name on the pass and saw that I had already gone this semester. Now I only go if it is an emergency," sophomore Latoya Sherron said.

The passes created a problem for teachers who liberally handed them out. Since they weren't allowed to ask for a new pass when they ran out of spaces they just flipped it over and started signing the back.

The punishments for abusing the pass were ISS, OSS, and morning detention.

rolled around and so did ten eleven. Soon, sophomore, Michael Weisman found himself at 11:30 pm with out even starting his homework. "Well, I guess I've put it off for long enough now," Weisman said as he cracked open his Chemistry textbook.

With sports and other clubs preventing students from doing their homework after school, sophomores rearranged their schedules to get their homework done on time. "I do my homework after I get back from soccer practice and eat dinner. It usually doesn't get done until around 11:30 on good nights," Sophomore Jonathon Williamson said.

Long-range assignments crunched the amount of time available. "We don't do much in Journalism, so on slow days I do my homework in class," sophomore Caroline Judy said.

Sophomores' attention was drawn to the stone. "I paid extra to get a certain kind of stone, pink zirchonia. The ring was definitely worth it, since it's my favorite, and I'll have it the rest of my life," sophomore Stacy Scarazzo said.

Along with all of the stone and design options, students could mark their ring by getting their name or nickname inscribed on the inside. Herff Jones sponsored the ring sales in October, rings were delivered in May.

School lunches offered two choices for lunch each day. "I'd rather have the choice between meals than have peanut butter and jelly everyday. I'd get tired of the same thing everyday and I don't have the time to make anything," sophomore Carrie Witherel said.

From the a la carte line, students could purchase an entire meal or just a snack. "I don't like eating in the cafeteria because it smells like dishrags. I buy from a la carte so I can eat in the hallway with my friends," sophomore Kate Westling said.

Students brought lunches so they would not have to stand in line or if they disliked school food. "I bring my lunch because I don't like school food. It is too greasy. It's easier to have my mom make it for me so I can choose what I want in it," sophomore Jennifer Rudolph said.

Despite the additional minutes to get to class, students continued to receive refferals because of excessive tardies.

chatter and laughter spread through the hallways as students lingered outside their classrooms.

"I like having a longer time between classes because it gives me more time to go to my locker and talk to my friends without having to worry about being late," sophomore Michelle Drucker said.

Longer breaks also gave sophomores the opportunity to complete assignments. "I use the extra time to look over my homework and maybe check it with someone else's," sophomore Natasha Remeyer said.

The additional time gave sophomores more freedom to get through the crowded hallways without a fear of tardiness. "Now I'm not always late to class because of the crowded hallways," sophomore Nick Pardi said.

The extra eight minutes allowed students with classes in trailers to get back without running.

sophomores with Bags O' Fun while gathering the endless array of pencils, books, and notebooks off of the floor, sophomore Jennifer Rodriguez realized it was time to get a new bookbag.

"I got a new bookbag with two straps because my other one snapped. It was the kind you put over your shoulder. I was walking down the hallway and then all of a sudden my bag was on the floor. Hopefully my new one won't do that," Rodriguez said.

Sophomores used backpacks as a canvas for personal expression and satisfaction. "I decorated my bookbag by drawing fruity flowers and hearts in glitter pens all over it. In the space that was left over I wrote the names of my all my favorite poets so I could feel special," sophomore Ian Williamson said.

Sophomores wore two styles of bookbags, the traditional two strap and the over the shoulder bag.

AGAINST THE FLOW

The record breaking class of 2000 weighed in at 1009 students, 20 percent more than classes in previous years.

The first change for the class came through with a different curriculum than ever before. The Freshman Seminar was a pass/fail class taught during the first semester. The required course focused on study skills and time management.

The freshmen and faculty had a chance to get to know one another on October 8 during a basketball game. Admission to the game was 1 dollar and a canned food item. The food was dedicated to ACTS and the money went to the class fund.

A peer mentoring program was established, pairing juniors and seniors with freshmen. The groups met once a month to discuss their progress. On December 19, the group went bowling together.

"hey Carlos!" Freshman Carlos Medina turned around, only to discover that he had not been the person called. "A disadvantage of having a common first name is when someone calls my name, I turn around and so do fifteen other people," Medina said.

Students with unusual names were seldom confused for someone else. "I like my name because no one else has the same name in any of my classes, so when people say my name, I know that it's me," freshman Mercedes Alexander said.

Misspellings were the result of unusual names. "My family has a tradition where we collect all of the misspellings of our last name. So far we have filled an entire shoe box," freshman Jared Espenschied said.

Whether students had familiar names or unusual ones, conflicts were inevitable. However, students learned to accept the names given to them.

freshmen were counted tardy without a Pass to Class ding. The sound of the first bell echoed through the hall. Four more loud "Dings" followed. Students in the hallway scurried to class to find that they were marked tardy. "I was walking in the door of my classroom just as the bell rang and my teacher still marked me tardy," freshman Charlie Moore said.

Late buses and crowded hallways were reasons why students were late to class. "The way I found out that I had five tardies in my first period class was from looking at my report card.," freshman Casey Frazier said.

A new tardy policy went into effect when the new four by four schedule began. In order to enforce the policy, a set of consequences was designed. The first tardy was a warning. The second tardy was an hour detention, before or after school, and the third tardy was a four hour detention on Saturday. Each subsequent tardy was an out of school suspenion.

Within the first three months of the classes, there were 207 tardies in the freshman class, out of the total, 736.

though she pushed as hard as she could, freshman Jennifer Wilhite could not get her bag into her locker. "I really hate having to lug my other bag around the school. It doesn't fit in my locker and I don't have a sports one in the lockerroom," Wilhite said.

Freshmen involved in after school activities without sports lockers found it difficult to carry around their bags. "I bring my dance bag with me to all my classes. I just wish it would all fit into my locker," freshman Yolanda Turner said.

There were other reasons freshmen carried around baggage. "I have to carry my purse with me plus my other bag because I don't want my all my make-up to get ruined in my book bag," freshman Demetria Johnson said.

There was not any other option for some students except to carry around extra bags. If the bags did not fit into their lockers they were forced to carry them.

"only one more hour" echoed in the gym. Compared to P.E. classes of years in the past, classes on the 4 by 4 lasted an additional forty minutes.

"I really like having the longer P.E. classes. You are given so much more time. Everything is not so rushed, like changing clothes, and being hurried in from outside, so we have time to change into school clothes," freshman Omari Smith said.

"I hate the P.E. classes, they are way too long. It just seems like they drag on and on. You get all gross because you're in there so long and it gets really hot," freshman Mike Lapharn said. Though the extended time allowed for more instruction, it was not always popular.

Having P.E. for an hour and a half provided freshman with the opportunity to learn and master sports skills taught without feeling as if they were rushed.

Having long or short nails affected students performances in athletic competiton."I have to cut my nails for crew because my hand goes over my knees when going back on the slide, I've scratched my leg so many times," freshman Marlena Johnson said.

Students faced problems faking sickness. "I hardly ever stay home with sickness because my mom is a nurse. She can tell if I'm really sick or if I'm just faking it," freshman Gerda Chapman said.

Freshman found various activities to keep themselves busy. "When I stay home from school, I usually catch up on homework or watch ESPN," freshman Ryan Swanson said.

Students strapped for cash turned to their parents for free haircuts. "My mother cuts my hair all the time. I don't like going to salons and it's cheaper to have her do it," freshman Jeremy Hinkle said. A trim at the Hair Cuttery cost ten dollars.

Students found personal items to decorate their notebooks with. "For Mrs. Cunningham in English, we get stars if we get hundreds on quizzes or tests. She tells us to put them on our notebook or planner," freshman Jessie Sutherland said.

Freshmen rummaged through favorite magazines to find pictures and words to tape onto notebooks. "I decorate with drawings, pictures and interesting words. I find things that are rare and reflect my personality," freshman Carolyn Todd said.

Artistic students showcased their talent. "I draw smiley faces and flowers on my notebook. I also write names of bands, like No Doubt and Garbage," freshman Aubrey Chambers said.

Freshmen also decorated backpacks and shoes.

toothpick in hand, freshman Charlie Walker attempted to pick out the ham and cheese sandwich still lodged in his braces. "I don't like wearing braces because I get food stuck in them all of the time. Sometimes I don't even know it's there until my one of my friends points it out to me." Walker said.

Mouth appliances required a good memory, and a sense of responsibility when worn. "I only have to wear my retainer at night until morning. I hate having it because I always forget either to wear it or where I last placed it. Then it hurts when I put it on because my teeth have moved," freshmen Jeremy Rosen said.

Dentists let patients choose from different designs on retainers. " I picked a pink one with glitter sparkles since it was my favorite color," freshmen Amanda Rosen said.

Excuses, Excuses

When students did not turn in homework assignments, teachers gave them a zero in the grade book.

"where did it go?" freshman Chasity Hood said. After scrambling around before school, she still could not find the homework she had done the night before.

"Normally when I don't do my homework, or lose an assignment, I tell my teacher that either I left it at home or in my book on my desk. Most of the time they tell me to bring it in the next day," Hood said.

Other students who did not do an assignment did not give excuses. "I don't make up an excuse to tell my teachers. I just tell them I didn't write the assignment down so I didn't do it. Unfortunately that always gets me a zero in the book," freshman Damien Braxton said.

Coming up with believable excuses became habitual. "I just tell my teachers that I did it, but left it on the kitchen table," freshman Orville Uochulene said.

Every day's like two on the 4 by 4. This same thought plagued the minds of students, teachers, and administrators alike. The school board introduced the block scheduling plan in 1995 but it was shot down by parents. When it was eventually put into action the schedule had students taking four classes each semester. A year's worth of curriculum was condensed to fit into five months.

Teachers struggled to fill the 85 minutes of instructional time each day. Videos, presentations, and classwork became an everyday part of teaching. With the extended time students found they could begin their homework during class which allowed them to ask questions if they had them. This time was needed since students were left with two nights worth of homework every day.

The administration approved fewer field trips because the time missed was more valuable. The field trips that did pass the test included a French trip to the Phillips Collection, a Fashion Merchandising trip to New York City and a Drama trip to Arena Stage to see the Americanized version of Moliere's play L'Avare.

For safety reasons the entire building was re-keyed over the Winter Break. When teachers returned to finish the first semester they found themselves locked out of their rooms. On top of all that, they were also loaded down with woodwork

A calculated move. Paying careful attention to the height of the chemical in her graduated cylinder, senior Suzanne Stewart works on an experiment for AP Chemistry. Ms. Kathryn Voehl taught the course all year instead of conforming to the semester length dictated by the 4 by 4. Since the class lasted two semesters students had to reserve space for two classes in schedules instead of just one. AP Chemistry lasted all year but the students actually had to sign up for two different Chemistry courses, leaving them with four exams to take instead of two. The other AP courses were on an A/B block for the entire year. Students in these classes met every other day and took their midterm exams while the rest of the student body took finals.

ncreased participation meant increased regulations. The 4 by 4 gave students the opportunity to spend more of their time joining co-curricular activities and less time doing homework.

Independent Hill came forth with a new rule stating that all clubs and booster organizations had to create a "constitution" for their activities. Parent volunteers worked long nights negotiating by-laws in order to gain recognition as a legitimate club.

Every fundraiser had to be approved by the administration.

The lack of funds prompted the creation of the Academic Booster Club. With a glance at her schedule and back down the hall, sophomore Corrine Hausmann searched for Music Room 02. Room 02, along with the storage area, formerly the Drama Department, was converted to the Orchestra rehersal hall and storage room.

"It's nice having a room of our own because people can't just walk through the room like they used to walk through the stage, while we were practicing and I don't have to worry about my violin getting stolen because the storage room is locked," Hausmann said.

> "We are able to record ourselves. This helps us find our mistakes and in the process we learn."

After earning money from car washes, Tag Day and other fundraisers, the Orchestra Boosters purchased a stereo.

"We are able to record and listen to ourselves on the stereo system, this helps us find our mistakes and learn from them," sophomore Billy Boulia said.

On December 28, booster members Vicki and Wes Gray spent their Saturday putting carpet in the hallway and the rehearsal hall leading to the new room.

What is going on this month? Juniors Mandy Vida and Holly Baker talk to Mrs. Carol Carpenter about activities. NHS met the second Wednesday of every month.

Silence descended over the crowd of students assembled in the auditorium. Mrs. Carol Carpenter had quieted down the audience, and she began discussing with students the plans of NHS in the following weeks.

"Honor society does things that benefit our community and our school. We tutor mainly, but we also pick up trash around the school, and plant trees," junior Kimmy Reese said. The National Honor Society also helped with the Toys for Tots program, and sang carols at a nursing home.

NHS required a 3.5 GPA to be elligible. "You have to work really hard so you can maintain your GPA so you can stay in NHS and Beta club. Sometimes it can be tough to do this with after school activities," junior Aubrey Poe said.

At the end of October new members were inducted into Honor Society and Beta Club. "At Hylton, the induction ceremony I went to for a friend was long and they had a guest speaker. I liked ours though, because it was short. That works for me because I have a lot of homework," junior Jill Ingram said.

Dues for NHS were 2.50 dollars, and Beta club was 2 dollars.

As sophomore Lydia Mabika waited to speak as President of the International Club, she glanced at the faces that had belonged to strangers a year earlier.

"I wanted to get together all the people from different countries, because they might feel lonely and left out. I want to make people happy and smile," Mabika said.

The Spanish Honor Society encouraged learning through tutoring. "This is the first experience I've had tutoring since fifth grade. There are a lot of people in Spanish Honor Society and it gives the people who are being tutored individual help," junior Jackie Zambrano said.

"After the meetings we eat crepes, which are really similar to flat pancakes. Every club member brings in condiments to top the crepes. Honestly, I think some people may come to meetings just for the food," junior Jeanette Schorsh said.

The French Club traveled to Cafe Rocheambeau in Occoquan to practice their French. "Fewer people came than we had planned. We ordered in French, because the owners are French," senior Khilia Robinson said.

It was really fun because we got to talk on the walkie-talkies to communicate across the parking lot," sohomore Shannon Corwell said.

The Varsity Club voted on committee members to lead the group. Each position had certain jobs to be fulfilled, such as collecting money. Silence was golden when Sign Language club members pariticipated in silent suppers. At these dinners, students were not allowed to speak in order to learn more about sign language and life without the sense of sound.

"Every month we have a silent supper at Chuck E. Cheese, Pizza Hut, or Red Robin. We are not allowed to talk, only sign. I don't really pay attention to see if people really believe we're deaf or not. When we order our food, we write it down or point it out on the menu to the waiter," junior Rebecca Reibling said.

Silent suppers were for group members to get together outside of school to learn to communicate with each other, as well as with strangers not familiar with sign language. It also gave students time to practice their sign language skills.

Eddas Survives Schedule Reworkings

lucky no. 13

Don't walk under a ladder. If you break a mirror you'll receive seven years bad luck. Eddas staff members were faced with producing Edition 13 of the literary magazine.

The new scheduling caused the former schedule of Mrs. Cathy Hailey's Creative Writing classes to be reorganized. At first, this threatened to be bad luck, but it worked to the publication's advantage. "In the past, I've dealt with Creative Writing II and Eddas in the same class. Second semester, I can focus more on the magazine because I'll have a Creative Writing II class with all the editors in it," Mrs. Cathy Hailey said.

Eddas was composed of submissions from the members in the club as well as from other students. "This year we seem to be getting limited submissions. We're looking for more variety than just poetry; especially photography," senior Bridgit Kelly said. English teachers encouraged students to submit.

Extra Extra Time Is Spent By Staffers

As she completed her layout, junior Meghan Moore began to smell the pizza they had ordered at 9:00 pm. Staff members found the process of completing a paper took time, including dinner time. Although they sometimes had to give up their free time, they received free food. "When we have layouts on Mondays, it's the best. We get free pizza because we sell ads to them," junior Meghan Moore said.

Selling ads enabled the staff to earn necessary funding to produce the newspaper. "Since we're not sponsored by the school, we have to make an effort to get ads for every issue," junior Tanya Kern said.

The late nights spent in the newspaper room created a bond among the staff members. "We have a very close staff, although we do have our ups and downs," senior Katy Murphy said.

With only five minutes left, senior Dominic Willenbring quickly revised the last part of his timed test. On Jan. 30 the DECA, Distributive Education Clubs of America, members traveled to Manassas Mall for the DECA district contest.

"I placed first in the automotive and petroleum section. We had to take one timed test and two practical tests, which is when you roll play as an employee with a customer," Willenbring said.

DECA members participated in officer training and installation at a Virginia national park.

"For one of the activites we were in a group of about 20 people with seven boards laid out and each person had an injury. We had to step on each board to get from point a to b. It taught us how to work in a group," Vice President sophomore Kristen Daniels said.

With papers thrown everywhere and excitement at a feverish pitch, TV Production student, junior Tracy Clemons and senior Nathan Marsh, prepared to go on the air.

TV Production started a news program that first aired in early February. "Woodbridge's Corner Pocket is our news program that just got started. I'm producing and anchoring the show," Clemons said.

The news program wasn't the only new addition to TV Production. Tony Lilly became the new teacher. " It was rough to change teachers. Mr. Lilly has adapted well to the classroom environment.," sophomore Liz Sigmund, Unit Manager, said. Lilly had worked at a TV station prior to teaching.

Productions members filmed school plays, music concerts, and sports events. The students were required to attend a certain number of these "shoots" that aired on channel 49, Viking Television, for a grade.

Paint and materials lay on the floor as members of the Art Club began their latest project. The Art Club had no requirements to join. Members did not have to take an art class.

The Art Club took on many projects, such as the painting of Mr. Will Robinson's basketball office. The walls were decorated with a green and yellow line and "Viking Pride" written on the door. They worked on their projects Tuesdays at 2:15 pm.

Art Club officers were introduced at the first meeting. These officers had no duties except to assist their sponsor Mrs. Cheryl Saggers. The president, senior Brian Crowley, made announcements and kept track of attendance. "Computer Club is fun and it helps me with my programming. One of the activities we participate in is the fixing up of old computers and installation of hardware," said O'Brien. The school's lack of funds meant the club had to be resourceful.

The club created an untraditional tour. "We're doing a virtual tour of the high school for the web page so the middle schoolers can tour it and see the inside," junior Ryan Turner said. The virtual tour enabled students to find the quickest path between pods before encountering the masses in the halls.

Since the creation of the school's web page, the club has worked to keep it updated and has trained students to create homepages of their own. The library and foreign language labs were both hooked up to the internet.

To pay for expensive trips, the club sold "Humana Tees," T-shirts that displayed the environment and were made from organic cotton. "The T-shirt sales were boring and bad because no-one wanted to buy one. They were too expensive," sophmore Stephen Lewis said.

Players Caught the Skills to Play BothMentally and Physically

Young. That was how the JV and Varsity Boys' Baseball teams could be described. Both teams had new coaches. In addition, the JV team had only two sophomores while the remaining players were freshmen.

Players practiced daily. "The best part of baseball is the competition. We practice every day. We work on our running, throwing, hitting, and fielding groundballs consistently," senior Jared Tullo said.

Players also practiced their skills individually outside of school. "I play baseball because it's what I enjoy most and I find that it's what I'm best at. Personally, I practice pitching, running, long tossing and throwing against live hitters. Also, I practice my pitching motion," sophomore Bobby Ferguson said.

Teamwork was a skill that contributed to the sport of baseball. "I like baseball because it involves a lot of teamwork and it also it gives me a feeling that I am needed," sophomore Jorge Urrutia said.

The JV and Varsity teams both had experienced pitching staffs. By the end of the season, the players had improved their skills through practicing and playing games.

Honk! Honk! was the sound at the finish line as the Girls' lightweight boat placed first at the Stotesbury Cup. Vikes Rock Hylton's World in the Northwest Regional Championships

After the final shot in the Northwest Regional Championship game, Varsity Lacrosse proved victorious. The team beat Hylton for the first time in years with a score of 20-2.

Scorekeepers had to be alert to keep up with the fast pace of the game. "It was hard to keep up because the players ran up and down the field about 600 times before we could make a mark," freshman Molly Cameron said.

The JV and Varsity teams practiced together. "Practices helped us prepare for games. They also helped JV players because many of them got moved up to Varsity," junior Jeremy Seeley said.

Conditioning started in February. Teams ran pyramids and a timed two-mile run. "We do the fast break drill to help our transition game and suicides in order to help our endurance." senior Mike Sands said. Players trained in the weight room on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

The Varsity team worked together for a long time. "The core members of the team have played with each other since seventh grade. Now we're all seniors, and we're a powerhouse team," senior Chris Wilson said.

Lacrosse was a club sport which was not funded by the school. Each team member was required to pay 125 dollars to be able to participate.

Lacrosse originated in North America when French explorers adopted the game, "baggataway" from the Native Americans. The stick used reminded them of a bishop's crosier, or cross, so they renamed the game "lacrosse."

JUST KICK IT

Against the Downpour and Through the Goal, the Team Places First in State

Boom! The clouds broke and sheets of rain flooded the pit. Five hundred gallons of water were drained from the playing field on May 29.

Excess rain along with the water that melted from the snow caused inconveniences. When the field was flooded the boys could not practice, posing problems for the Varsity and JV teams who needed to use it.

The Varsity soccer team won the VHSL State Championships on June 1 against Clover Hill High School. "I expect us to reach the State Tournament and go for it. I think we have a skilled team that has the ablilty to win almost every game, if not every game. The whole team is confident in our chances to be first," junior Ryan Cummins said. They beat Clover Hill with a score of one to zero, one of the seven shutouts for the team that year.

The JV team got new uniforms. "Our new uniforms are forest green Adidas with white stripes down the shoulders and Woodbridge across the chest. I like them because they are new and nobody else has them," sophomore Kevin Kleinman said.

Before each game the teams stretched for ten minutes.

KICKIN' BACK

Varsity and JV Teams Score Their Way to a Winning Season and a District Victory

As the girls soccer team took to the field each game, the smell of victory was a feature throughout the season.

Practice included rigorous workouts in preparation for tough games. "Practices were hard at the beginning of the season because of the weather. When the weather got warmer , we practiced outside and worked hard a lot on endurance," sophomore Jen Looney said.

World and American Studies teacher Mike Yeatts became the Varsity team's new head coach. "I think with a new coach, we had a fresh start. Mr. Yeatts helped us improve our game with new strategies," junior Page Henry said.

Varsity started the season off with a pre-season scrimmage in Virginia Beach. To encourage team bonding, Yeatts assigned rooms randomly to each girl. "The Virginia Beach scrimmage helped the team click, because of all the time we spent together," senior Alison Keehan said.

The JV team finished the season under the direction of Coach Robert Loftus. "We had an awesome season. It was the best we ever played because everyone got along," sophomore Sarah McQuarry said.

The Varsity team achieved their goal of winning a District Title banner. The team won the Commonwealth District Championships.

New Coaches Bring Philosophy and Winning Season to the Softball Diamond

Okay girls, only 10 more hills to go!" Sophomore Ellen Stevens yelled as the JV Softball team gasped for breath. Despite cramping muscles, the girls completed their 50 hills before practice began.

The JV and Varsity teams faced new coaches Mike Petock and Tim Taylor. "Softball this season has been a learning experience for everyone. Coach Taylor brought us together as a team and we're playing better because of it," junior Marti Kaufhold said. Both teams had overlapping practices for thirty minutes, which helped inter-team realtions.

The foundation of conditioning was hills, which doubled as punishment."The freshmen had to do 50 hills at practice one day because they forgot to bring a water cooler up to the trainer's room. I felt really bad for them, especially because they had to do them before the real workout started," sophomore Ellen Stevens said. Hills were run in increments of five or ten, either before or after practice.

The JV team came from behind to win six games in the last inning , while Varsity finished the season with a winning percentage of 88.

RACKIN' THEM IN

Solid Play Leads Tennis Team to Undefeated Season and the State Tournament

Arms outstretched, standing along the fence around the edge of the tennis court, members of the tennis team went through one of its many pre-practice stretches to help warm up their arms. Hours of practice contributed to a well deserved, undefeated season.

Players had high expectations because of past successes. "For the first time, we are coming off a season in which we went to states. The training is harder, and we all seem more focused. We have depth and the entire top six has the ability to play well," senior Jason Wild said.

The goals set by players meant harder practices for the team. "Tennis this year is, or seems to be, more serious. Coach Lewis E. Forrest has gotten a lot more strict than last year. We have new team members who will have to adjust to the coaching and playing style: discipline and toughness," senior Rutherford Berry said.

The hard work of the team helped them nearly every single match, earning them the opportunity to compete at the Regional Tournament. "We are all working really hard to go all the way to States this year. We all really want to be the best we can," senior John Deaton said.

The tennis team ended the season the number one in the District. The teams total record including Post Season games was matched at 14-2.

Runners Participate in a Number of Field and Track Events to Give it All They Have

The sound of a shot blank exploding verberated through the air, and the season had begun. The first meet in Lynchburg at the Liberty University Invitational tipped off the beginning of outdoor track.

In order to participate at the meets, runners had to attend practices for five consecutive days. "Unlike any other sports, you can always count on track practice never being cancelled, no matter what kind of weather there is," senior Pedro Torres said. Practice began at 2:30 pm every single weekday.

To ensure an excellent performance, runners ate responsibly and avoided unneccessary injuries. "Before practice we spend at least a half hour warming up, then we start to do the running. It's extremely important to stretch both before and after practice because pulling a muscle can keep you out of a lot of meets," junior Alysia Barton said. Injured runners were not allowed to attend practice until they had completely recovered.

At meets, track members wore sweats, shorts and a Woodbridge T-shirt. Members had to maintain at least two C's and a D to run.

Runners Pace Themselves Through Rain or Shine Leaving Opponents in the Dust

Eyes centered on the gun, a hush fell over the spectators stretched along the border of the winding course. The runners stepped up to the chalky line. "I live for race days. The big meets with one hundred plus runners, it gives you a rush of adrenaline," senior Jason Sosa said. Saturday meets had 80 or more runners in each race.

On race days, the aroma of flex-all filled the bus and ears perked up when Coach Jim Rodgers dispensed his pearls of wisdom. "I have always found Coach Rodgers' advice useful, and use it throughout my race. I concentrate on each girl in front of me and take one down at a time. I try not to have any doubts, I just go for it," sophomore Kim Furman said.

Preparations were the same every race day. "After we do our warm-ups, stretch, lace up our shoes, and say our prayer, I go through my race picturing the course and the runners around me," senior Jennie McNamara said. Runners prepared by knowing their course from start to finish.

ALL FOR ONE

Practices, Drills and Determination Lead to the State Championships

"We're all for one. And one for all. Together we fall. And in the end, we win them all," senior Rae Melvin cheered along with the team as a part of their preparation before a game. The team members had a set routine before each game.

Dominated by returning players, theVarsity team was accustomed to one another's playing techniques and diverse styles.

"I think the reason we did so well this season was partly because we knew each other so well because of being on the team. We are all used to our coach and also each other's attitudes and ways of playing. We know where our teammates will be without even looking," Melvin said.

State Championships provided the team with confidence. "I really can't believe we made it to States. It was very surprising. It built our confidence and brought us closer," junior Ashley Blair said. Championships took place at Frank Cox High School.

Involvements in tournaments led to the team's overall success. "This year, everyone was more involved. Being the host of the district game and going to tournaments got us pumped," sophomore Katie Stephens said.

Focused practices and drills enabled the team to achieve Regional Runners Up which took them to States.

SACK ATTACK

A Defense Oriented Team Prevented Opponents From Scoring Three Times

High expectations and a positive attitude. That was the mental frame of the JV Football team which guided them to a winning season.

The team started off the season with a four game winning streak. With only three more games left in the season, the team set their sights on a perfect season. "I think that we could go undefeated because we have a good running game with our offense and a strong front line and secondary with our defense," freshman Dwayne Garrett said.

Players played football both in and out of school. "I like to play football because it's fun and I have always played it. I play everyday and I want to continue playing," sophomore Bobby Strawderman said. Through constant practicing players gained more experience.

The JV team was scheduled to play nine games, while the freshmen were scheduled for seven. However, the season was cut short due to inclement weather. The games against Stafford as well as Osbourn City were cancelled because of the rain. The JV team made up their game against Stafford the following week rather than playing against H.D. Woodson.

"We have a unique group who are hungry and aggressive. They like to hit and have a will to win," Coach Brian Bonacquisti said.

Crack! Seniors Cortez McNeil and Matt Lehr slammed their heads together to get psyched for the game. Kickoff was at 7:30 pm as the football teams warmed up. "Coach Davis makes us perform crucial game situations during practice so when the real thing comes, we are prepared to execute a successful play," junior Avery Griffin said.

With a record of nine and three, the Vikings made it to the regional finals. "The key to our record has been on account of our defense. The offense may sell the tickets, but the defense wins the game in most cases," senior Carlos Coleman said.

Team unity contributed to a majority of the Varsity team's most successful games during the season. On September 20th the team played H.D. Woodson and the score was close throughout the entire game.

"When we played H.D. Woodson at home the score was close in the first two quarters, 6-6. Also, a lot of the team members were intimidated by the Woodson's players' size. However, we put the 'T' in team which stands for the team's togetherness and instead of playing like individuals and we ended up winning 30-6," senior Brian McNeil said.

Throughout the season the team's captains posed as communication links between the coaches and the players, which was a factor in the teams' successes.

Team Qualifies Two Golfers For Regional Tournament Meeting Goal

As Nick Bland stepped onto the green for his final hole of the season, he was competing in the playoff for the final slot for the State Tournament. The Viking golf team qualified two members, Nick Bland and Sean Murphy, for the Regional Tournament, which was their team goal.

The qualification of golfers to Regionals accomplished one of the golf team's goals of the year. "Our goals for this year were to not let one bad shot ruin our entire match, and to qualify as many people as we could to the Regional Tournaments," Coach Lou Lepore said.

The team's most successful performance was at the Quantico Invitational Tournament, on August 28 and 29. The team finished 14 out of 46 and had a two day total score of 687.

"Although the team as a whole did not do as well as we would have liked at Districts, we got some people to Regional play, which was one of our goals," junior Sean Murphy said. The team's 383 combined score put the team in 6th place. The top four scores were averaged together to get the team score.

"We had a young team this year; there was one senior. Next year, we won't lose any key members because our top players are juniors," junior Chad Snead said.

Plink. Plank. Plunk. One by one droplets of water began to hit the courts. Soon the drizzle turned into a heavy downpour causing the tennis match to come to an immediate halt.

"We tried to play in the rain once but it got too heavy so we played one match and then made the rest of it up a couple of days later," freshman Mariko Esannason said. Postponements were made due to inclement weather and lack of daylight.

With only five returning, the 11 new members went into match play after only three weeks of practice. "My first match was nerve racking. I was so unsure of myself because it was the first time I had ever played tennis competitively. I was losing at first, but then I concentrated harder and followed through on my strokes helping me to win," sophomore Latoya Sherron said.

Remaining undefeated for all of the regular season the team became top seed and were excused from the first round of play in the districts matches.

"Although we had an excellent season, for some reason I thought Districts would be difficult. We had a few players that weren't very experienced. Luckily they won and took us to Regionals. Some of our players made stupid mistakes, but that was okay since we won anyway," freshman Carolyn Greco said.

With Power and Skill, Volleyball Teams Spike Their Way to a Winning Season

Bump, set, spike. Katie Lutes repeated these commands over and over in her mind during volleyball games. Little reminders helped Lutes stay focused on the game and also held high hopes for a winning sports season.

Team spirit encouraged new team members to cooperate during the season. "I think it helped that everyone on the Freshman team became good friends. It helped us communicate better on the court," freshman Cassie Kline said.

Along with team unity, confidence contributed to projecting the right attitude towards winning. "It's always important for us to keep our head up when we are down. When you show the opponent defeat, then you have lost it right there," freshman Kelly Butcher said.

Practices occurred every day after school. "Our practices have been really tough. Sometimes we had to run sprints and do push-ups. It payed off in the long run though, because we had a really successful volleyball season," freshman Aubrey Chambers said.

The JV team won the division championships, while the freshman finished with a record of 9-3.

Summer Conditioning Takes Varsity Team to Semifinals of Regionals

The volleyball sprung up into the air, as junior Melanie White set the ball. Junior Nashunda Harper made the spike for the game point against Hylton. "In the game we had a new lineup that we weren't used to but we pulled together in the end and won. It was a tough game, and Hylton played really well but we played better. It was an awesome win," Harper said.

In the preseason, veteran members of the Varsity team got a head start on the fall season, playing games and lifting weights. "Some of the experienced players went to a team camp over the summer. We also had open gym and weight lifting over the summer, if some of us weren't doing anything we'd get together and go to the Chinn Aquatics Center or the Dale City Recreational Center to play a game," junior Melissa Milligan said. The team played an unannounced game against Garfield. The game was moved to a Wednesday because of SAT's.

Senior Erin Van Gorder had twenty-four kills and junior Nashunda Harper had twenty-eight for the season. Over all, the Varsity team placed 9th with the score of 9-15 and 13-15 , ending with a record of seventeen and seven. In the district, they took third behind Osbourn in Manassas City in second. The team advanced into the Regional semi- finals.

Freshman Coach Moves Up to Coach JV For the New Season

With the sound of balls bouncing and the squeak of shoes filled the court as prospective players showed off their skills to Coach Lewis Howard and Coach Mike Wilson. The JV and Freshmen try-outs determined which players would be selected for the teams.

"Everyone except for freshmen try -out for Varsity. The freshmen try -out for JV. The coach looks at ball handling, sprint speed, and strength. The better you are, the higher up you're placed, but it's possible to switch teams during the year," sophomore Vince Brady said.

Immediately after teams were selected, practices began.

The teams learned new skills to use in games. "During practices, we run to keep up our endurance. We practice skills like layups and shooting. We learn all of our plays in practice so we'll be ready for games," freshman Joe Pekanyande said. The freshmen practiced at Old Bridge Elementary and Lake Ridge Middle schools in the evenings.

The Freshmen team was not permitted to work-out in the weight room. The privilege was granted only to the Varsity and JV teams.

Players Get on the Ball and Strategize Their Way to a Successful Season

With his practice jersey on, senior Marvin Harrison practiced with teammate junior Carl Drummen to create a play. Planned strategies allowed them to be prepared during games. "Our coach usually has a game plan for each team we play so our practice varies accordingly. We approach each practice with a different angle depending on who we play. Our strategies are hard to beat because we go over them so much," senior Andy Hewlett said.

Warm-ups allowed the team to stretch their muscles as well as work together. "During warm-ups, we practice lay-ups and go over plays that we think the opposing team might execute. Our coach then gives us pep talks that encourage us and get us pumped up before each of our games," senior Marvin Jefferson said.

Fundamental drills proved to be beneficial. "We work on fundamentals a lot because they are very helpful to us. We work on defensive moves individually as well as team drills. We work really hard to stay in shape for our games. Our coach stresses staying in good shape," senior Umar Bowers said. The team ran laps and lifted weights to stay in shape.

Teamwork and support from fans led to success for the team. Due to practicing every day after school for at least two hours, the team stayed in shape for each game.

New Coaches Help Players Gain Momentum as the Season Progresses

Thud! The sound of basketballs echoed through the gym. Freshman and JV teams scrimaged each other during evening practices.

Mr. Greg Margheim was the new coach for JV. "Our coach has never coached basketball before, so we teach him some things while he teaches us some new things," freshman Katie Sutton said. Freshmen players also had to adjust to a new coach, Mr. Lewis Forrest.

Coaches alternated practices between after school and at night. "I like night practices better because I have time to go home, finish homework, and relax. I have to wait to eat dinner late after practice so I don't get sick while practicing," freshman Kia Turner said.

In practice, players worked on their positions. "High school basketball is different from middle school basketball because it is more challenging. I have to play point guard and guard, which I am not used to. I used to play forward, so the switch is a big change for me," freshman Danielle Fargus said.

New coaches, varying practice times and different positions were adjustments for the teams.

With a Returning Team, Basketball Dribbled Strong Across the Court

Hearts pounded and adrenaline rushed as the buzzer sounded. The Varsity Girls Basketball team was close to defeating Gar-Field. "Gar-Field is our traditional and biggest rival. We haven't beaten them yet this season, but we play them at home on Valentine's Day. Our conflict is halfway personal. They think they're unbeatable and we want to show them they're wrong," sophomore Katie Lutes said.

The sport's district changed to include Gar-Field and Hylton. "The district has gotten much harder and competition has risen to such a high level. The team has realized that and puts even more effort into the practices and games. To be district champions would be a great achievement," sophomore Casey Godfrey said.

Every member of the team was a returning member from the previous year. "It's made us a stronger team. We know our places and each other very well. Basically, nothing has changed except that we're playing better," senior Kristin Gartner said. The two new additions to the team were sophomore Korrin Anderson and freshman Angie Simms.

Gymnasts Get New Equipment and Use it to Their Advantage

Congratulatory hugs were shared between members of the gymnastics team as the announcer at the Park View Invitationl announced they had won their division with a score of 114. The gymnasts had scored high enough on each event to beat the four other schools in their division.

Practice was shortened due to the time it required to set up and take down equipment. "Every day we go up to our gym and take each piece of equipment out. Then we warm-up, practice, and then have to take everything down," freshman Marianne Benson said.

The gymnastics team traveled to South Lakes, Washington and Lee, and Park View schools to participate in larger meets during the weekends.

The gymnasts held weight training sessions in the pre-season to increase strength and endurance. "Before the season began we would all go to the weight room and lift weights together. During the season, we do our conditioning after we finish practice in the evening," junior Desi Dietlein said.

The team participated in a Cartwheel-a-Thon, executing as many cartwheels as they could in four minutes. They asked friends and family for pledges per cartwheel. The money raised went towards sweatpants and matching T-shirts.

Swimmers Dove Into a Season of Competitive Meets with a New Coaching Staff

Goggles secured, cap snapped, and eyes centered on the other end of the pool, junior Kate Skeele took her starting position on the block. Splash! Swimmers raced against the clock as well as their opponent. "The closest race I swam was the 500 freestyle against Hylton. I was swimming against one of their top swimmers and for the first 100 meters she was ahead of me. I started to pull up and get closer. We were side by side for the last 50 yards, and when we touched the wall, my time ended up a second faster than hers," Skeele said.

With a new coach this year, swimmers adapted to a new beginning and a change of pace. "Coach Doggett sets the relays up so we can get first and second in the race, because they add up to being a majority of the points scored. She's a good coach, because she knows what your potential is and how to apply it to your best event and race," junior Wes Moore said. Each team member swam either a 50 or 100 yard leg of a relay event.

On race day, swimmers were either on the side of the pool cheering for a teammate or bundled up in a blanket, listening to a walkman. Packed bleachers of friends and family chanted for swimmers while echoes filled the Chinn Center.

Stroke by stroke, senior David Waters finishes up his 100 yard Individual Medley in a sprint. The event was 50 yards of each stroke.

Dead asleep after a long race, senior Mike Hicks takes a short nap. Swimmers relaxed in between races to regain energy and strength.

Fast Lane

Indoor Track Runners Paced Themselves to Remain at the Front of the Pack

Bang! The gun sounded and she took off. Senior Mamie Peckanyande shot out of her starting blocks. She quickly took the lead of the 4x200 meter relay at the George Mason Relay Invitational on January 4. "When I start out of the blocks, I feel so much pressure on me. Using blocks gives me the advantage because it puts me one step ahead of everyone else. Being so short, I need the extra advantage," Peckanyande said. Blocks were metal, and nailed into the starting line for sprint races.

The pole vault was introduced to the girls during indoor track. "Pole vaulting is fun, but we haven't learned to jump really high over the bar. It's the first year girls have been allowed to pole vault. I'm glad I get to be the first girl from Woodbridge to do it," senior Debbie Rothlein said. Indoor track provided a training season before outdoor track.

Running around the bottom floor of the building created health problems. "Running inside makes it harder to breathe because of the dust in the school. I use three inhalers, a pink one, a blue one, and a yellow one. I use the yellow and pink ones the most. The blue inhaler doesn't really work that well," sophomore Lisa Katzbeck said.

Indoor track meets were held inside various schools. They used a 200 meter track.

Due to inclement weather, runners were forced to move inside to train. Distance runners ran in the lower level, while sprinters practiced in the business hall. Long jumpers and highjumpers practiced jumping in the back of the weight room.

"The warm weather has allowed us to train more efficiently outside. We have more room to do workouts, which will help us to run faster times in big meets. Furthermore we got a new rubber track to run on which was installed in early October."

Despite his blindness, freshman John Dubois was able to compete. Dubois wrestled by depending on his sense of feel to execute moves.

Caught in the grip of his competitor, senior Roger Stewart concentrates on his next move. This was Stewart's first year on the team.

Strong Hold

Teams Wrestled Their Way to Take First Place in Two Invitationals

In the last five seconds of the final match, the referee counted out the remaining seconds as senior Ben Freer pinned his opponent from Osbourn Park. "I think that the team has a really good chance of doing well. We've put a lot of time and effort during the preseason into preparing. We have practiced everyday from 2:30 until 5pm. We should have more wins coming our way," Freer said.

The team competed in dual meets and attended invitationals. "The whole team is still really upset about our loss to Stonewall. We were not satisfied with our efforts, because we didn't wrestle our best. If we had, we probably would have won," senior Chris Lee said.

The wrestling teams' toughest opponent was Hylton. "Hylton is our biggest competitor this season. We have beaten them every year since the school has opened, and this is the last year they would have a remote chance of beating us because three-fourths of their team are seniors," junior Mark Delcourt said.

Six returning members qualified for states. "With the returning state qualifiers the team had an advantage over the other teams. We have the most experienced team that we've ever had," senior Nathan Gibson said.

Cutting weight refers to a wrestler trying to lose enough weight to wrestle in a lower weight class. It was not mandatory but gave wrestlers an advantage. Running and dieting were methods used to make weigh-ins before meets.

Cheerleaders Play Mix and Match with Their Counterparts to Create New Looks

With smiles on their faces and stadium lights illuminating the football field behind them, the Varsity cheerleaders revved up the crowd with tumbling and cheering routines. Through any game, in any kind of weather, the cheerleaders were present to show their spirit.

The freshmen earned recognition for their cheers, winning a Top Ten award. "When they announced that we had won, I was in shock. We started screaming and hugging each other," freshman Sara Taylor said. They won the award at the University of Maryland Baltimore Campus cheerleading camp.

Each squad received new uniforms. "Varsity bought new uniforms, so their old ones were handed down. We ended up with the Freshmen skirts and the Varsity tops, and the freshmen had the opposite of us," sophomore Christina Abadir said.

Varsity acted as buddies to disabled Little Leaguers.

Smaller Squad Leads to New Uniforms and Shorter Practices for the Vikettes Dance Team

"C'mon ride the train," blared on the stereo system as the Vikettes performed their routine for the pep rally. They danced at every home football and basketball game.

The team consisted of 24 members. "We cut the team a lot smaller this year. Although I miss the larger team, there is a lot more that we can do now. Our small size has allowed us to purchase new uniforms," senior Amelia Vernon said. The previous squad contained 33 members.

Vikettes practiced Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays from 2:30 to 4:15 pm. They also had four hour practices on Saturdays when preparing new routines. "Compared to last year, this year is less stressful. Last year we were going to Nationals in Orlando, Florida so we practiced for three and a half hours every day. We still practice a lot, but the stress is gone," sophomore Lauren Morris said.

In addition to dancing in school games, Vikettes also prepared for competitions in spring. "In April, we go to the Miss Capitol City competition at University of Maryland Baltimore Campus. It's an all day competition where we perform three routines and the seniors perform a solo routine," junior Julie Burns said.

During the year, the Vikettes held workshops for other dance teams.

Clever children came to a carnival in Cincinnati?

They would calculate the angle to throw a ball at a dunking booth.

Colophon

The 1400 copies of the 1997 Valhalla were printed by Herff Jones Yearbook Company in Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. Each book cost $35-$45 due to a progressive price increase. Publishing Representative Annette Rollyson and Customer Service Adviser Barb Merson aided in publication.

The cover is school-designed, quarterbound, and custom embossed. The base materials are Dark Green 1068 and 140 Brown #49 Woodtick with Pale Gold 16 and Kelley Green 2 applied. The cover has been turned on 160 point binders board.

The endsheets are also school designed. They are printed on 100# white vibracolor stock. The applied ink is HJ 350 Forest. Cover and divider logos are printed in Minstrel and Eurose Heavy Face.

The 320 pages are printed on 80# Bordeaux enamel stock with 64 pages of four color process. The signatures are Smythe sewn and have been rounded and backed. All type is Camelia Roman. Body type is 12 point, captions are 10 point and photo credits are 8 point. Section headlines were created in TypeStyler and imported into Adobe PageMaker.

All student and faculty portraits were taken by Segall-Majestic Photography Studios based in Baltimore, Maryland.

The surveys in the Academics section were conducted by the staff on 100 students at random. The questions were formulated by the section editor and the students had four answers to choose from.

Editors' Note

Wood up homie G's? Thanks for listening to my pleas. Well, thanks to Greg Graffen he doesn't know how truly inspirational he was. Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Drew Stanley. Thanks to Taco Bell for Star Wars toys, bean burritos no onions and Andy Trotta (a.k.a. Helium Boy). Hey Webby Boy. Sean Lyng, spelt with a Y 'cuz he's quite a guy. XMegganX we love you. MOULEN. Bake those cookies girls. Look out for all the Little Tonys. Mike Scites we love you. Pick up that popcorn and get back to work. Thanks to Mrs. Munnel for the c'pooter help. Bye BiBeth. The dominant is the biggest X. The letter of the day is X for all you Seasame St. kids. FRED!! Bad hair contest with newspaper and Eddas. Thanks to newspaper for the picture of Tony, even though you guys didn't know it, and all that printer time. May the force be with all of you. 25 cents. GapGirls. Just say no . . . to aliens. Lay OFF the typemaster. Bark bark. Moo. Hey nice bark. Cilia reeks. Has anyone seen any falculty pictures? Thanks to all the moms and dads. The copy machine provided hours of entertainment. Look out for the COMMIES. Toilet paper makes good headbands. Where's my two dollars, Burnley? KT sorry you're not in the book, we love you anyway. Pink triangles and rainbows. The chicken is for lickin. Donnie, have fun with Burnley's dice. Has anyone seen the ladder? Kara says it's in her box. Don't cry for me Argentina. Bagels. Where'd that extra pica come from! 10 cents. Tony has an announcement, LOOK OUT! Duck duck goose and NY girls. Bellylickahs. Security. Breaker breaker. 4th St. Diner. Did you sign out? Annette, you're awesome. Thanks for the advice Mrs. Moulen. The eagle, 5 times as fly. Yoda has a cute butt. The international language. Leave it in, it's Against the Grain.

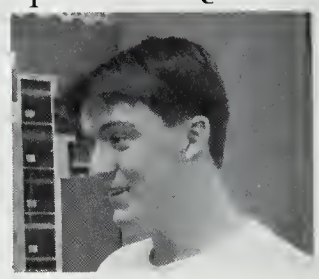
Qquarreling quintuplets questioned Quakers?



I would argue that not that many Quakers live in Quebec and to stop fighting.

Seniors Kara Artz and Julie Foxworthy grab an opportunity to relax when a lull in organization pictures occurred. Pictures were taken over a period of two days during school hours. The yearbook staff started production on the Valhalla September 3 and finished the final deadline February 28.

Against the Grain. That's where we'll stay. All 3,000 of us dealt with the overcrowding since students were actually Coming Out of the Woodwork, literally. The introduction of block scheduling created more and more Woodwork for students and teachers alike. With their thoughts Carved in Wood, teachers wrote essays to Governor Allen in an attempt to win one of the 69 computers he donated to the school for their classroom. We had to Knock on Wood in hopes that we would not be tardy to class considering the punishment for three tardies was an out-of-school suspension. With these advances, both popular and not, we went against all odds and came out on top. Now one final question,

What Wood You Do ... on your own?

Reflections of a long day of school. Freshman Andre Floyd heads downstairs to the Freshman lockers. As an experiment, the school was built without windows or doors in the classrooms. The only opportunity for students to see the light of day was when they passed one of the ceiling to floor windows in the hallways. One of the windows at Entrance Three broke during a storm which caused the administration to put wooden boards up to protect both the students and the window. An electronic lock was also added to the doors for security.

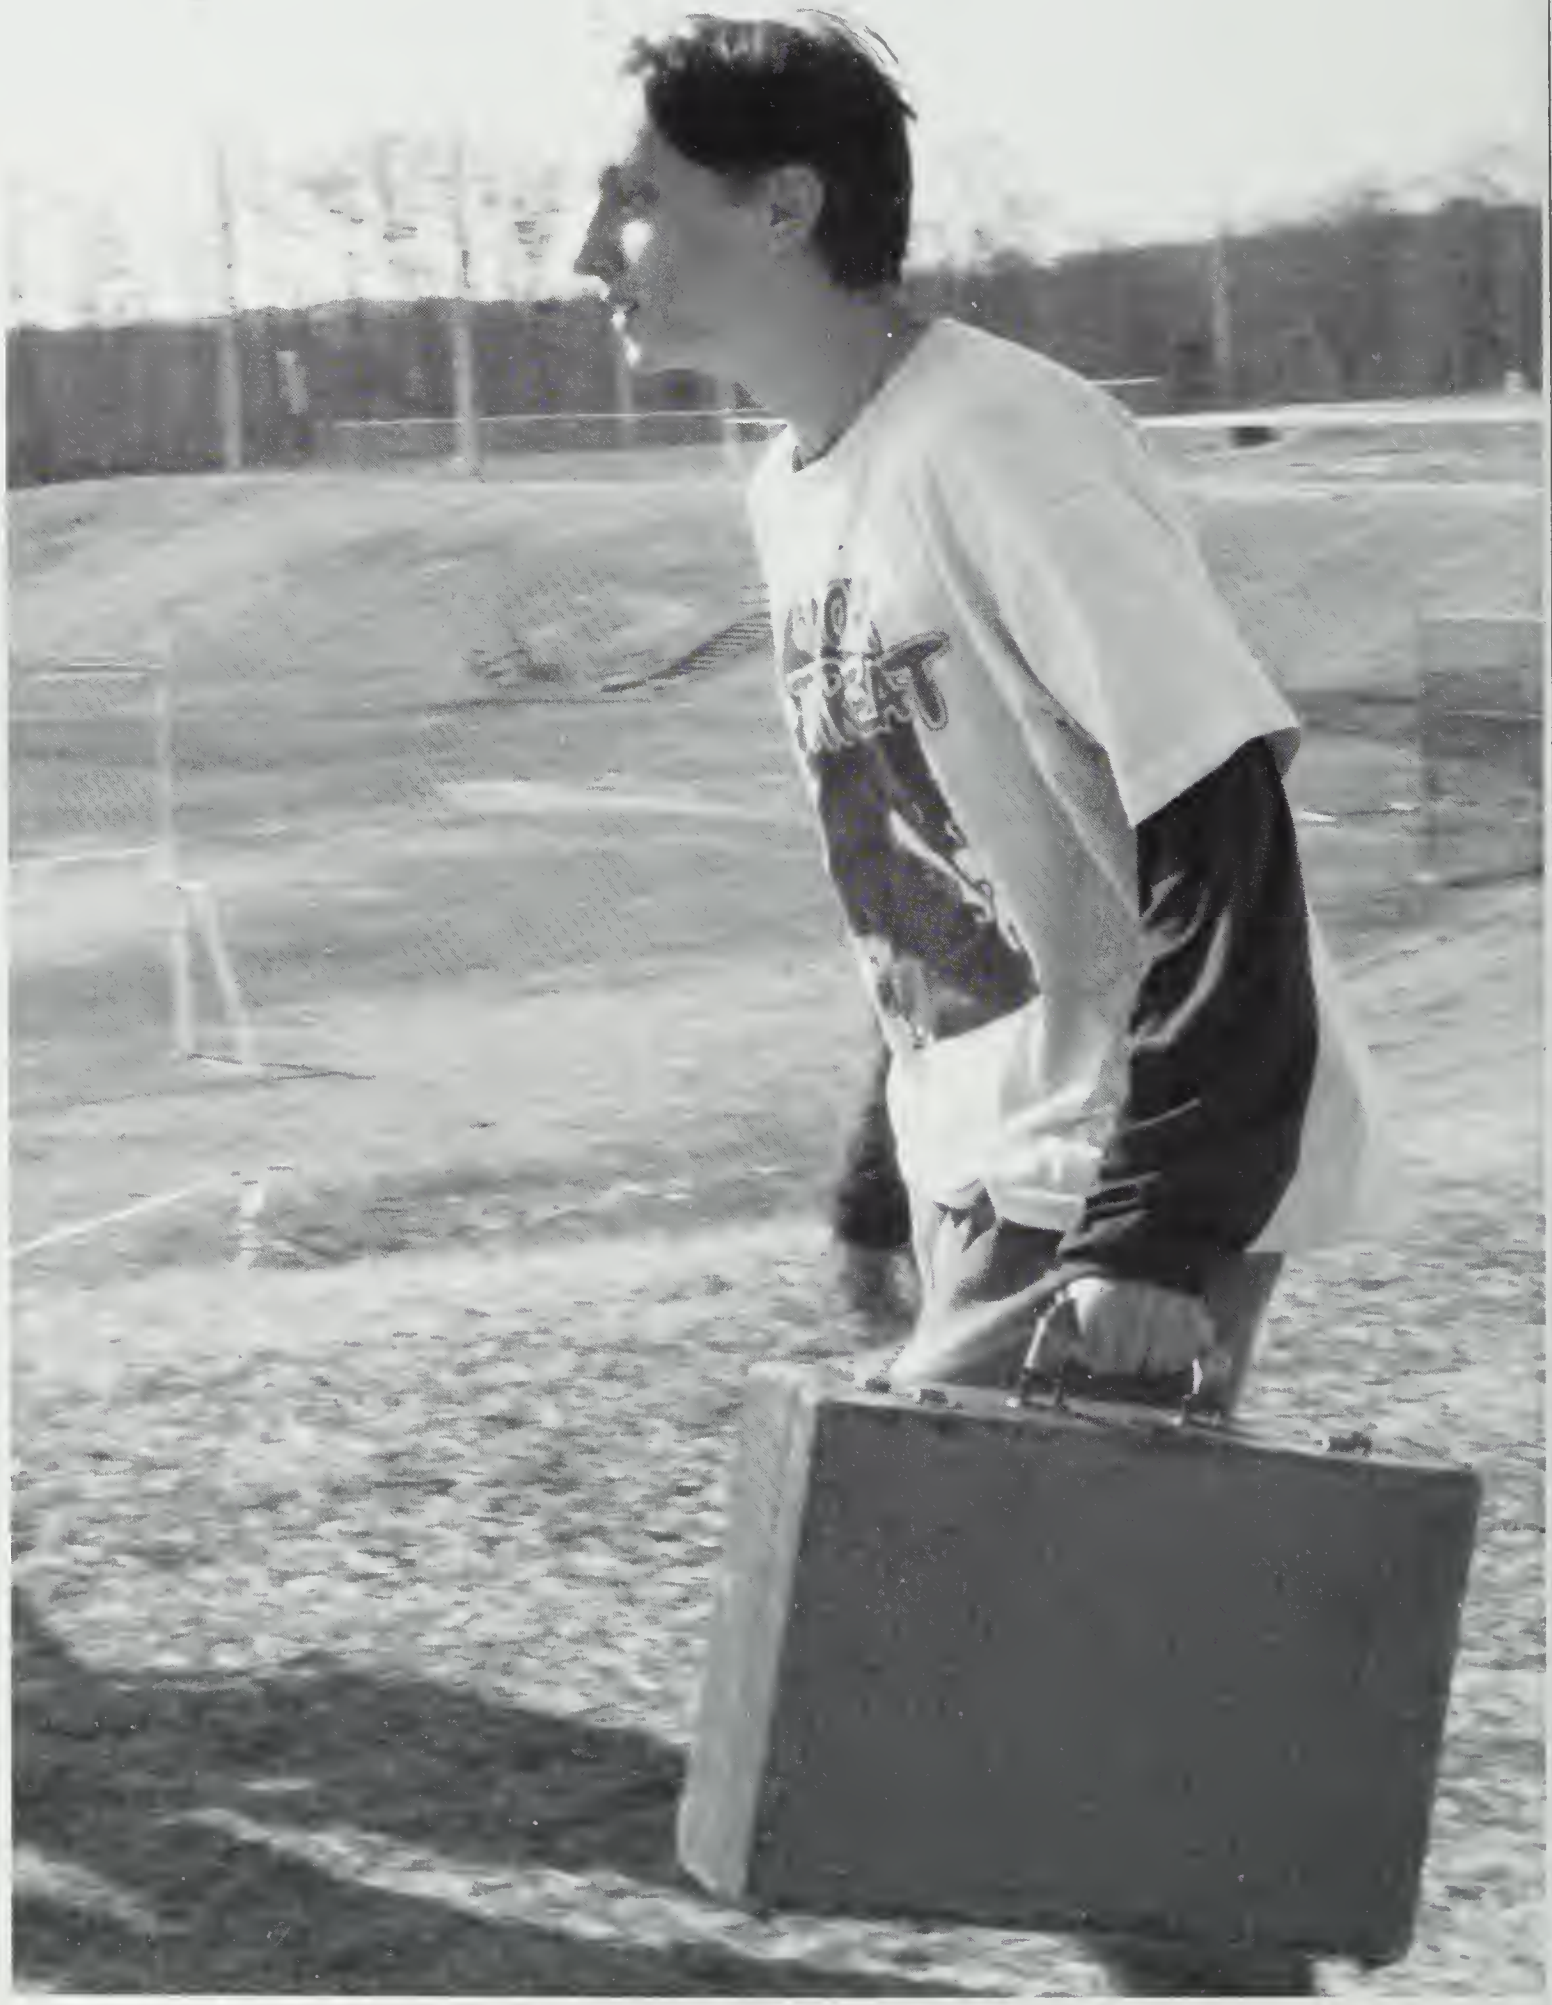
Wrong way. After school freshman Karen Jack walks back to the front of the line of buses looking for her ride home. The 44 school buses lined up before the bell rang at 2 pm each day to take students home. The bus tunnel provided shelter for students whose buses were near the front of the two rows. Everyone else had to trek past the teacher parking lot to get to their buses. After doing the high school run, bus drivers went to middle and elementary schools.

Into oncoming traffic. Seniors head out to Trailer 1 for their GEMS class after A lunch as underclassmen go back inside the building to eat. Since the trailers housed all the different subjects students went to lunch at different times, creating opportunities to pass their friends. During the winter, the wooden bridge over the cement ditch froze causing administrators to pour sand over the icy patches. Students found themselves sliding on the grain as well as the ice.



Something a little different for a change. Senior Jason Gillespie turns to go back inside the building after taking a Biology II test outside because it was too hot in his classroom. Instead of the traditional backpack or shoulder bag, Gillespie carried his books to school in an old briefcase. When the groundhog saw its shadow, February 2, teachers began to lead their students outside for labs, tests and discussions. The relaxed setting made for an environment more conducive to open discussions. Publications students took their brushes outside to paint posters advertising their sales. When the wind picked up, paint flew against the red brick wall of the school building leaving a speckled rainbow.
